Towboaters Accept Pact

Around Clock Talks Set

VANCOUVER (CP) —Around-the-clock bargaining for a 10-day period will begin Monday in a bid to find a way out of the deadlock which has stopped virtually all major construction projects in British Columbia.

Twenty-five representatives of building trades unions will sit down at 10 a.m. that day with an equal number of negotiators from the Construction Labor Relations Association.

And, if all goes according to plan, they won't leave the conference until a settlement has been reached in the construction tie-up which began April 14.

The marathon talks were arranged by Labor Minister Les Peterson who met here Friday with leaders of both sides. The unions then rejected his bid for a 60-day truce.

DAILY REPORTS

If a settlement is not reached by Wednesday, Peterson will be sent daily progress reports on the talks. He refused to say what action he would take if a settlement is not reached by June 22.

The non-stop negotiations will be held in five board rooms at the University of B.C. Arrangements are being made to provide all meals as well as sleeping facilities for the 50 negotiators.

Five representatives from each of five unions will meet separately with groups of five CLRA negotiators. The five union teams will be from the plumbers, laborers, carpenters, operating engineers and heat and frost insulators.

A spokesman for the CLRA said:

"We're still holding to our offer of a minimum of seven per cent per year in two-year contracts.

"This offer was made to the unions before the government issued its six per cent guideline and we're not going back on it."

20,000 Men Await Word

VANCOUVER (CP)—Striking towboat members of the Canadian Merchant Service Guild today announced acceptance of a settlement proposal.

A guild spokesman said picket lines will be maintained until agreements are signed with each towboat company. The British Columbia Towboat Owners Association, representing the 53 companies, earlier recommended acceptance of the three-year package proposal worked out by federal mediators.

Cecil Rhodes, secretary-treasurer of the western branch of the guild, issued the following statement early today:

"Towboat members of the Merchant Service Guild have by secret ballot ratified the proposed agreement by a vote of 805 in favor and 195 against.

"However, the strike is not over and picket lines will be maintained and honored by all unions until the agreements are signed by the individual companies.

★ ★ ★

"We have also been advised by the B.C. Federation of Labor that affiliated members are not to return to work until they are advised to do so by their respective unions, who will be informed by the federation when the agreements are signed."

The strike began May 3 and hit hard at the B.C. economy, particularly the forest industry. Some 400 tugs, necessary to the forest industry for log and barge towing, have been out of service because of the strike.

Upwards of 20,000 men in logging camps, sawmills and pulp mills have been idled, either because of a log shortage or because workers refused to cross picket lines set up by the striking towboat men. The guild picketed operations that were being supplied by tugs manned by supervisory personnel.

The settlement proposal includes a 28.26 per cent compounded wage increase over three years and extensive improvements in manning and accommodation clauses, together with new Department of Transport regulations regarding safety conditions on the tugs.

The pay increase is 10 per cent each year in the first two years and six per cent in the third. Existing rates for licensed personnel range from $600 to $950 a month.

★ ★ ★

In tabling new DOT safety regulations in the Commons, Transport Minister Don Jamieson said existing vessels will have 4½ years to comply. He said all new regulations will be enforced by DOT inspectors in scheduled and unscheduled checks.

The towboat dispute led to the jailing last week of the guild's chief negotiator, Captain Arnie Davis, for contempt of court. He was released Friday on bail, pending an appeal scheduled to be heard June 22.

He said today towboat men accepted the contract settlement under duress.

Capt. Davis, who at first would not comment on the settlement reached early this morning, later said he had been advised by his lawyer he could make a statement.

He said he is unhappy with the 28.26 per cent compound wage increase in three years and he believes the guild membership was "pressured into accepting the . . . contract because of litigations."

Mills Ready To Roll

Area forest industry mills shut down by the towboat strike are ready to roll again right away.

"We'll be back in operation just as soon as the pickets are gone," Bill Reynolds, manager of B.C. Forest Products' mill at Crofton, said today.

He was commenting on the vote by striking members of the Canadian Merchant Service Guild which favors settlement by a margin of 805 to 195.

PICKET LINES

About 800 men at the Crofton mill have been off work since May 27 when towboat picket lines shut the operation down.

The guild's pickets and a shortage of logs hauled by towboats have shut down forest industry operations up and down the island, idling about 20,000 in B.C.

Reynolds said the pickets at Crofton disappeared for a few hours during the night but were back about 6 a.m. today. One of them told him there was an "imaginary" picket line still there during their absence.

In Victoria, W. A. Nelson, manager of the BCFP Point Ellice sawmill division, said the operation will begin again "as soon as we get the word."

It's not likely the operation can get under way before Monday, he added.

Claim Backlog Probe Ordered

VANCOUVER (CP) — Federal Labor Minister Bryce Mackasey has initiated an investigation into the unemployment insurance claim backlog crisis created by B.C.'s labor disputes.

His action was disclosed in a telegram answering a joint telegram sent to Ottawa Friday by Vancouver mayor Tom Campbell and Rehabilitation Minister Phil Gaglardi.

Gaglardi and Campbell asked Mackasey to help speed up a backlog of about 4,000 unemployment claims filed in Vancouver recently. They offered to help the federal department by supplying extra staff for the local Unemployment Insurance Commission offices.

Answered Mackasey:

"At my request, an immediate investigation has been undertaken by the Unemployment Insurance Commission and as soon as their report is received I will be in touch with you at once."

Mayor Campbell said Mackasey's action will temporarily relieve the crisis situation in Vancouver.

Mr. Gaglardi and Mr. Campbell met Friday morning to discuss the problem.

"The workers in trouble fall into three categories as far as I can see," said Mayor Campbell.

"First, there are the bulk of them who legally should be receiving unemployment insurance. Then there are the strikers and then those in sympathy with the strikers — like people who won't handle hot goods."

BRAZIL ACCEPTS KIDNAP DEMANDS

RIO DE JANEIRO (AP) — The Brazilian government agreed today to release the 40 political prisoners demanded by terrorists as ransom for the release of a kidnapped West German ambassador.

"In an effort to save the life of West German Ambassador Ehrenfield von Holleben, the government has agreed to release the 40 political prisoners," a note from the government said.

The note broadcast by a radio station here was signed by the ministers of justice and foreign affairs.

Earlier the kidnappers had demanded the release of 28 prisoners and issued a call for guerrilla war.

Presumably the increase to 40 prisoners from 28 to be freed came in a later demand from the kidnappers.

Montreal Posties Back

MONTREAL (CP) — Montreal's postal workers returned to work at 8 a.m. today, ending a work stoppage which began Friday morning to back wage demands and contract negotiations.

About 4,100 men walked out as part of the rotating strikes across the country by the Council of Postal Unions, which represents Canada's 27,000 postal employees.

The council is conducting contract negotiations with the treasury board in Ottawa.

Havin' th' towboats back is a long pull in th' right direction.

Labor Vote Landslide Predicted in Press Poll

LONDON (Reuters) — The ruling Labor party was buoyed by a public opinion poll today which predicted it would win the British general election Thursday, June 18, by a landslide.

The poll, prepared for a Conservative newspaper silenced by the now-settled national newspaper strike, said Labor would win by 12.4 per cent—enough to give the party a 140-seat majority in the House of Commons. Labor's majority at dissolution was 62.

Standings in the 630-seat House of Commons at dissolution were: Labor 343, Conservative 263, Liberal 13, Republican Labor 1, Welsh Nationalist 1, Scottish Nationilst 1, Independent Unity 1, independents 2, vacant 2, Speaker and two Deputy Speakers 3.

Observers believed that if Labor did win by 140 seats, the victory would mean a change in the leadership of the conservatives.

GOOD SAMARITANS GUNNED DOWN

NEW YORK (AP) — A man was killed and five others wounded today when they went to the aid of a woman fighting off a rape attempt by two men, police said. The two attackers drew pistols and fired at the rescuers 12 times.

The 44-year-old woman's screams for help brought the six rescuers to a hallway in a Lower East Side building about 2 a.m.

When police responded, they found "bodies all over the street," a patrolman said.

Ferries Sail Into 2nd Decade

By BRUCE YEMEN

Premier W. A. C. Bennett will celebrate a 10-year-old triumph in political decision-making Monday.

The decision was to thrust the provincial government into the ferry business and the result is the immensely productive B.C. Ferries service which was inaugurated between Vancouver Island and the mainland June 15, 1960.

Bennett, who will speak at the opening of the Roberts Bank Superport Monday, is expected to mark the ferry service anniversary in some as yet undisclosed manner, possibly on his way home to Victoria.

MAY CHOKE UP

The premier, an emotional man, may be tempted to get a little choked up some time during the day. Chances are the ferry anniversary will have more impact on him than the superport opening.

Getting the big port built was a major victory because B.C. in effect dared Ottawa to get it started before the province took the initiative — and Ottawa got to it, with B.C. providing backup port facilities.

But the ferry system was a full-fledged provincial venture first decided in the summer of 1958 by Bennett when Black Ball and CPR ferry strikes threatened to isolate Vancouver Island.

Some critics called the decision a reckless venture conceived in anger over trade union tactics, but the inaugural of two government ferries on the Vancouver-Victoria run in 1960 was the beginning of the end for the doubters.

Before long the CPR dropped its Vancouver-Victoria service and the government bought out Black Ball for $6.7 million.

From a modest two-ship start the ferry authority, now a part of the highways department, has grown to 23 ships ranging from a 28-foot-long water taxi, the Dogwood Princess, to a 325-foot-long ship, the Queen of Prince Rupert.

Ferry employees numbered 200 in 1960, 2,000 a decade later. Passengers increased from one million to six million annually in the same period.

The service is even showing a slight profit, and fares are the same as they were more than 20 years ago, $5 per car, $2 per person. Passenger fares are reduced to $1 on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday.

With a sharp eye to economy, the government has managed to double the car-carrying capacity of two 100-car ferries by installing folding platforms and then stretching the ships.

STRETCH JOB

The two stretch ferries, the "queens" of Esquimalt and Victoria, are now the big load-carriers on the Victoria-Vancouver run. Other ferries will be stretched later.

Plans for a second ferry on the 330-mile Kelsey Bay — Prince Rupert run have been indefinitely shelved. The government was reported looking closely at a Swedish ferry earlier this year by Bennett late denied that any purchase will be made.

'Healthy' WAC Muses On 18 Socred Years

Premier Bennett took a few moments Friday to underline an anniversary, recall some fond memories and take a confident look at the future.

It was 18 years ago on the 12th of June, he noted, when the voters of B.C. first elected his Social Credit government. The Socreds edged the CCF 19 seats to 18.

"Eighteen years ago," the premier mused in his office. "What a day. It was a day when the people of British Columbia saw a new vision. They saw what could happen to a great province. People who were here in 1952 can look back and say they did a good job when they voted for Social Credit."

Bennett said he felt older 18 years ago because of the great responsibility which faced his administration. He will be 70 on Sept. 6.

"Now that British Columbia is advancing on all fronts I feel much younger and in much better health than I did in 1952."

The province is just coming into its own on the Pacific rim and its residents "have everything to look forward to."

U.S. Dollars Don't Worry Bennett

Premier Bennett said Friday he is not concerned about United States desires to continentalize Canadian resources.

He said at a press conference people who are worried about the effect of American investment in Canada are "anti-American."

And he reiterated a promise made during the last session of the legislature that B.C. will not permit any export of water other than that which flows south across the international boundary.

"So long as government makes sure our people own all the resources, as British Columbia does, and these people only make investments, there is nothing to fear," Bennett said.

"It makes no difference whether the capital is equity capital or investment capital, as long as governments set the rules under which it operates.

"It's just a bunch of anti-Americans who are excited."

U.S. Hikes Uranium Price

WASHINGTON (WP) — The U.S. Atomic Energy Commission has raised the price of enriched uranium for nuclear power reactors, a move that promises to anger Congress and parts of private industry.

In an action in which commissioner James T. Ramey voiced a rare dissent, the five-man AEC commission voted to increase the price of reactor-grade uranium by $2.70 per kilogram, to $28.70.

The move would have the effect of immediately adding $10 million to the prices private utilities pay each year for reactor uranium.

Commisioner Ramey said he opposed the price increase at this time partly because he believes it is premature and partly because it sets a bad precedent for subsequent price increases that could make atomic power less competitive with power from coal, oil and gas.

Ecological Centre Proposed

Growing public interest in the environment has to be met by establishing a centre that specializes in information and advice on ecological matters, a new citizens' committee said today.

The committee, which includes several biological scientists, is pushing for such a centre to provide "ammunition" for groups and individuals combatting pollution in Greater Victoria.

The committee has also suggested the environmental centre as a Greater Victoria centennial project.

The centre would provide files of sources of information on pollution, interpret technical data to the layman and relate it to regional problems, set up a speakers' pool, provide resources such as films, and generally stimulate public interest.

The committee said in its proposal the centre could be located in an old house, with a staff consisting of an ecologist (director), volunteer co-ordinator and secretary.

Rather than duplicate existing services provided by local libraries, schools, university and the Provincial Museum, the centre would provide supplemental services along environmental lines.

Ex-Manager Dies at 82

Funeral services for George Dougall McLean, 82, a retired prominent Toronto businessman who lived in Victoria, will be held at McCall Brothers funeral chapel Tuesday.

Rev. Brian Whitlow will officiate at the 1 p.m. service.

A resident of 1318 Beach Drive, McLean lived here 16 years. He was born in Georgetown, Ont., and later made his home in Toronto where he became vice-president and general manager of the Hickok Co. and Canadian manager of the Viyella Co. He was also a member of the Unity Lodge, No. 606, AF and AM, in Toronto.

McLean is survived by his wife Phyllis.

A GOOD YEAR for Jacqueline Tarry was crowned when she was declared winner in the provincial finals of the B.C. Music Festival Association Beethoven Bicentenary competition, senior section, held in Vancouver. The 20-year-old violinist was winner of the Congress of Strings Scholarship in April, major strings award in the Victoria Music Festival. This scholarship will take Miss Tarry, who is a student of Jack Kessler at the Victoria Conservatory of Music, to the University of California for six weeks study.

increase of 56 cents an hour in five stages, plus additional pay for workers who don't receive tips.

Average wage under the old contract was $2.20 an hour. Employees said they would walk out Friday night if no settlement was reached.

A lockout of employees by 37 hotels from the outskirts of Vancouver to Hope in the upper Fraser Valley continued today, and 22 hotels in Greater Vancouver have been served strike notice by the Hotel and Restaurant Employees Union. No date has been set for a walkout. Both the Valley and Vancouver disputes are over wages.

In the forest industry, negotiations between the International Woodworkers of America and Forest Industrial Relations resume Monday — expiry date of the current IWA contract. So long as negotiations continue, however, there can be no strike.

More than 30,000 IWA workers are affected, many of them idled since early May because of the towboat strike.

In Penticton, a strike by 170 members of the Canadian Union of Public Employees against the Okanagan city moved into its second week with no sign of a break.

Housing 'Bungle' Blamed on Andras

OTTAWA (CP) — Opposition Leader Robert Stanfield told the Commons Friday that the government has bungled its housing policy and created a disastrous housing shortage through its anti-inflation policies.

He was speaking on a Conservative motion—on which there is no vote—calling for new measures before the Commons summer recess to stimulate expansion of house construction, reduce housing costs and reduce or eliminate unemployment in the construction trades.

Mr. Stanfield said housing starts had dropped 43 per cent in the first five months of this year, with May the worst.

Robert Andras, minister responsible for housing, responded with predictions announced earlier that "close to 200,000 units" would be started by the end of the year.

He said "we should get starts of at least 30,000 low-income housing units in 1970."

BLAMES STRIKES

The minister said three-quarters of the decline in housing starts in April and May was due to a decrease in starts of low-income housing and the impact of construction strikes in Quebec and British Columbia.

The rate of low-income housing starts was depressed by decisions of provincial agencies and non-profit or low-income housing corporations, he said.

Mr. Andras said a committee of officials from the finance department, Bank of Canada and CMHC are monitoring housing starts and mortgage-lending.

The government would consider "remedial action" if things did not go smoothly, he said.

Mr. Stanfield accused Mr. Andras of a "very high degree of incompetence" in his predictions and blamed the government's fight on inflation for the current housing shortage.

CITES TIGHT MONEY

He said the government's tight money policy—including high interest rates—had discouraged housing starts and raised prices.

This had led to demands from labor for ever-higher wage and salary settlements, the Conservative leader said.

Mr. Stanfield suggested some "bold and imaginative measures" required to meet the housing crisis: easier terms for Central Mortgage and Housing Corp. loans, abolition of the 11-per-cent federal sales tax on building materials and removal of the "unsettling effects" of some of the proposals in the white paper on taxation.

Lincoln Alexander (PC—Hamilton West) Conservative housing critic and mover of the motion, said CMHC had predicted increased housing needs while the rate of housing starts had dropped in the first part of the year.

He called the housing situation "an emergency for people on low incomes and a serious problem for people at the middle-income level."

J. A. Mongrain (L—Trois-Rivieres) said the causes of the housing shortage are not entirely the government's fault.

Also responsible were the rise in interest rates, inflation and the failure of unions to join the government's attack on inflation.

But fellow-Liberal Tom Goode (Burnaby-Richmond) put the blame squarely on the government for the "unforgiveable" drop in housing construction.

The cabinet has made housing the "whipping boy for inflation," the Vancouver house-builder and land-speculator said.

He said Liberal back-benchers concerned about housing aren't speaking out and that there are "more plodders than prodders" in the opposition.

Newfoundlanders James McGrath (PC—St. John's East) and Walter Carter (PC—St. John's West) urged special federal aid for housing in depressed areas.

Mr. McGrath said there were more than 900 families on public housing waiting lists in his province. Mr. Carter said the cross-Canada total was 100,000.

David Orlikow (NDP—Winnipeg North) said he was disappointed by the "complacent view" of Mr. Andras.

The minister was more concerned about housing than all the cabinet put together, so that if he was complacent "we are in trouble," Mr. Orlikow said.

Logging Halted

TERRACE (CP) — Twin River Timber Ltd. Friday called a temporary halt to log production in an attempt to drastically reduce its bulging inventory at its Terrace and Nass Valley operations. Rod Jordan, vice-president of the company, said "the action was a direct result of irresponsible actions by the Canadian Merchant Service Guild and the International Woodworkers of America."

Cheers, Sadness Greet N-Plant Delay

There was jubilation and disappointment in Duncan Friday when it was learned the provincial government has shelved plans to build a $150 million nuclear power station at Cowichan Bay.

Kurt Horn, president of the Duncan-Malahat Society for Pollution and Environmental Control, called the decision "magnificent."

"I think that is delightful news. I hope they don't build any nuclear generating plants in British Columbia unless they have done much more research," Horn said.

"I am just happy. Time will tell that we are fortunate not having to accept this plant for our neighborhood. They had some real close calls in the United States."

Duncan Mayor Jim Quaife said sidelining plans for the plant would be a loss for the area.

"I am very disappointed because I had hoped that we could be given an opportunity to sit down with the government to discuss a proper development," Quaife said.

"It would have been a great boost for the Cowichan Valley. We were looking forward to this project."

PLANS DORMANT

Premier Bennett told a press conference Friday plans to build the nuclear plant have not been abandoned, but are currently "dormant" due to some "great drawbacks."

The drawbacks he referred to are thermal and other kinds of pollution that would be produced by the plant.

Bennett said finding an acceptable compromise between the need for a clean environment and an expanding economy is tough.

"We intend to keep the good life," he said, "but the basis of the good life must be an expanding economy."

He made his remarks about the nuclear generating station at a press conference which was held to announce a 15-year study of the province's energy needs by the Provincial Energy Board.

SET GOALS

The Energy Board, headed by B.C. Hydro chairman Dr. Gordon Shrum, has been directed by the cabinet to produce goals for each five-year period until 1985.

The first interim report is due by Feb. 1, 1971.

The order-in-council setting up the study lays down the following areas of study:

- Main transmission lines to be constructed to interconnect existing power plants;
- Additions to existing plants;
- Need for new hydro-electric plants;
- Feasibility of thermal-fired plants which would burn readily available fossil fuels;
- Interchange arrangements between B.C, Alberta and Pacific northwest states;
- Organization of generating and transmission facilities to ensure maximum benefit for the province.

Oak Bay Police Hope for Pay Hike

Oak Bay police are hoping the police commission will grant a 2 per cent salary increase to bring them to par with Esquimalt and Saanich.

Constable Harold McNeill, president of the Oak Bay Police Union, said Friday the commission had not been approached officially.

"We're hoping that they will discuss the increase at their next meeting. It would be better if it came from them.

"However, if they say no, then we may start to push."

Esquimalt police, as a result of contract negotiations recently, are getting a 2 per cent salary increase and Saanich received a 16.56 per cent pay raise over a 22-month period last October.

Both Oak Bay and Victoria were awarded a 14.36 per cent increase over two years by the B.C. Mediation Commission last October.

The date of the police commission's next meeting, probably in late-June, will be set when Mayor Frances Elford returns from Halifax, N.S. where she has been attending the annual convention of the Federation of Mayors and Municipalities.

MID-AIR RESCUE. An apparent miscue in a parachute demonstration Friday at Fort Monmouth, N.J., resulted in one GI grabbing another in a mid-air rescue. Both men jumped from a helicopter but the second man passed under the first and in doing so partially cut off the air in the first man's chute. The latter began descending rapidly. The second man, seeing the predicament, caught a line and held on until both neared the ground. (AP Wirephoto).

'Get Angry' At Pollution

VANCOUVER (CP)—Roderick Haig-Brown, a crusader for the environment decades before the cause became "big time," Friday called on the public to get "mad, sore and ashamed right now" about pollution.

Addressing the Men's Canadian Club annual meeting, the new chancellor of the University of Victoria said:

"These are emotional words—I make no apology. I have listened to sweet reason on the Lower Fraser River for 25 years and the situation has grown worse."

Mr. Haig-Brown, author, magistrate and long-time conservationist, said it has not been a matter of blundering into the present mess of pollution generally, but "an unholy and mercenary trust in the alliance between government and business."

It was an alliance which has suppressed and distorted facts with regard to the effect of the bulldozer and the new technology, he said.

"It has evaded honest answers on those rare occasions when we had the wits to ask the right questions."

EVASION CHARGED

He charged that there has been evasion of responsibility and a failure to recognize real values and essential priorities.

"The young people are beginning to understand this," Mr. Haig-Brown said.

"Listen closely to them—your children and mine. Those under 40 will not be satisfied with public relations propaganda from industry and evasion and half-truths from government."

With the right pressure, an industry can find a way to use waste, he said, citing the salvage of waste at Cominco's smelter at Trail, B.C. following an international lawsuit, and a company that saved $500,000 a year when it ceased losing lead into a community water supply.

"Left to their own devices, with no pressures, these industries would have continued to waste resources."

Mr. Haig-Brown said the Fraser River, possibly the greatest salmon river on the continent, was grossly and unnecessarily polluted throughout the length of the valley.

"Municipalities dump raw sewage and industry dumps untreated waste," he said.

"The river carries the pollution of Chilliwack, Abbotsford, Burnaby, New Westminster and God knows how many other irresponsible municipalities on a full circuit of the Strait of Georgia.

"We've not enough population to pollute (the Strait) thoroughly, but we're doing the best with what we've got."

'Should Be Ashamed To See Us' Benson Told

PENTICTON, B.C. (CP) — About 250 union demonstrators Friday night accused Finance Minister Edgar Benson of being out of touch with the economic facts of life as he arrived here to speak on his White Paper taxation proposals.

The protestors, carrying signs in front of the secondary school where Mr. Benson spoke, told him he should be ashamed to visit this Okanagan resort community.

"I'm not at all ashamed," said the minister, apparently unruffled.

"I am one of the working class and I am prepared to get in touch."

The demonstrators carried placards inviting Mr. Benson to Vote Liberal for Unemployment and Have Some Okanagan Trout seasoned with DDT.

Mr. Benson spent about five minutes arguing with protesters, organized by the Canadian Union of Public Employees which has been on strike here against the city for a week.

Earlier, the minister told 500 persons in the Fraser Valley community of Chilliwack that the proposed "evaluation day" for taxation of assets may never come for most Canadians.

"The great many Canadians who own average homes and other small holdings have nothing to fear about the evaluation of assets proposal," he said.

"Our aim is to catch up with the speculator-developer who might make a fast quarter of a million on a land deal through re-zoning and re-sale.

"Under the White Paper, there would be a tax only if a farm were sold for cash and not kept in the family."

Mr. Benson made it clear he envisages "some sort of capital gains tax," but said it would not be patterned after the one used in the United States.

"Under the U.S. system, those who really make a big killing don't pay a penny of capital gains because they put the profit into a trust fund that passes from generation to generation," the minister said.

Mr. Benson said he hopes enough Canadians are convinced he will reduce income tax rates over the first five years of tax reforms so he can get down to "straightening out the problems," among them the expansion of small businesses.

"I can't see why some large corporations should pay at a lower tax rate in certain levels of their operations," he said.

"There are probably more efficient ways through our tax system to help small businesses accumulate capital without providing loopholes for those who don't need help.

"People don't want sacred cows in Canada—they want to see everyone covered by a fair tax system."

One-Upmanship Best Remembered

By JIM HUME

There's an old saying in the trade that a newspaper reporter is only as good as his contacts.

And it's true.

Without contacts, people he can trust and people who trust him, the reporter doesn't survive long in the competitive world of news gathering.

It follows then that after five years on a civic politics beat (and a ghastly-to-remember number of years before that on other beats, in other cities) there are hundreds of men and women to whom a departing reporter should pay tribute, and say thanks.

HUME

From that long list comes a shorter one of people more than just remembered.

Not all were friends. But they were honest and forthright (at times some of them were too damned forthright) and they helped me to whatever degree of success I've had in Victoria.

Minister of Municipal Affairs Dan Campbell, who to date has never ducked a question I've asked and who is usually readily available and who returns his telephone calls, is one of them.

He's remembered for many things, but especially for a brilliant piece of one-upmanship at a Union of British Columbia Municipalities convention four or five years ago.

On the final day of the convention the minister was being castigated from the floor of the convention for some comments quoted "in a story by Jim Hume of the Times."

"Who," asked Campbell with a slight raise of the eyebrow "is Jim Hume?"

It was enough. Hell, it was more than enough to convince 1,000 delegates that Dan Campbell had never in his life engaged in conversation with Jim Hume.

Beautifully done and still fresh enough to break me up.

There are softer and more sober memories.

Alf Toone, who rarely agreed with my point of view, or I his, but carried the chain of office as mayor with great dignity. And who had my respect.

Such dignity is sadly missed this year at city hall. Both mayor and council appear determined to clown their way through a couple of seasons of follies.

And that hurts because the men who could command respect — Hugh Ramsay, Harold Olafson, Clyde Savage, Ove Witt, Cec Parrott — are failing to do so.

Maybe they'll come through before the year is out.

They'll never do it over coffee in the aldermen's lounge.

They might be able to convince the mayor that council is comprised of nine elected officials, not one, if they slapped Courtney Haddock's wrist in public. He won't understand any other kind of rebuke.

And with this my last column, Hugh Ramsay won't be able to say I'm trying to drum up a news story.

There are the men and women who run city hall, the day-to-day workers who provide Victoria with an exceptionally efficient civic machine.

And it is efficient.

There are those in the city who, failing to understand that city hall employees are bound by the Municipal Act and by city bylaws, blame employees for the restrictions imposed by law.

Boorishly they beat their chests and make loud noises, which they always think of as clever, as they berate employees (usually in the lower echelons) and curse bureaucracy.

Let me say this: I've seen more governments at close quarters than most people; have worked with or around more than most; and the staff of Victoria city hall, from Dennis Young down, ranks among the most efficient.

It is, beyond doubt, the most pleasant and helpful staff, whether at the department head level or among the rank and file, I have ever worked with.

They have made my task over the past five years much easier than it would have been without their cheerful assistance. And it didn't go unnoticed.

The clock on the office wall shows a minute hand sweeping around to deadline.

My last.

So, as Brendan Behan once said: "That's it. That's the lot."

Thousands Flank Square At Royal Roads Ceremony

By PAT DUFOUR

It was pomp and circumstance in the finest service tradition Friday when Royal Roads Military College held its graduation ceremony.

With the Strait of Juan de Fuca and the Olympic Mountains as background, the red-jacketed officer cadets went through the traditional evolutions with precision.

A large number of admirals, generals and other high-ranking officers were among the thousands that flanked the huge parade square.

They stood as one man as, in a solemn and impressive slow march, the college's colors, presented by the late Governor-General George P. Vanier in 1962, were trooped.

The reviewing officer was Lt.-Gen. M. E. Pollard, comptroller-general of the Canadian Forces.

'SPLENDID'

He echoed the sentiments of all the spectators when he described the ceremony as "quite splendid."

He told the officer cadets that the college had set them high standards which they had met adequately.

"You must continue to set yourself standards that are hard to achieve."

Officer Cadet Martin McDonald of Calgary received the Governor-General's silver medal for obtaining the highest academic standing in his second year.

The Governor-General bronze medal for highest academic standing for first-year cadets went to Officer Cadet J. J. Fleck.

TWO AWARDS

Cadet Wing Captain E. G. MacArthur of Lancaster Park, Alta., received two awards: the H. E. Sellers Award for being the cadet chosen as cadet wing commander in the Honor State of Cadet Officers, and the Canadian Army Award for being the best second-year land element officer cadet.

Officer Cadet L. M. Lashkevich of Weston, Ont., was presented with the Lieutenant-Governor of British Columbia's medal, given to the cadet contributing most to the college's reputation during the past year.

To Officer Cadet J. T. Himmelman of CFB Borden, Ont., went the Royal Military College Club of Canada Award, given to the member of the graduating class showing the most improvement in all phases of military training.

A pair of binoculars, presented by the United Services Institution of Vancouver Island for the best all-round first-year cadet, went to Officer Cadet F. L. Fortie.

The Navy League of Canada Award, a pair of binoculars for the best second-year sea element cadet, was received by Officer Cadet R. M. Williams of Tacoma, Wash.

Officer Cadet D. B. Bindernagel of Kitchener, Ont., received the Royal Canadian Air Force Association award, given to the best second-year air element cadet.

For proficiency in the French language, Officer Cadet G. S. King received Le Medaille du Governement Francais.

The strains of Auld Lang Syne rang out as the graduating class and their color party marched off the parade for the last time. Dressed in their colorful caps and gowns, faculty members watched with the others as their former students made a last formal goodbye to their alma mater.

The awards were not yet over, however.

One of the professors, Dr. William Rodney, was also to have a moment of triumph.

At the reception that followed on the Castle grounds, he was presented with the University of British Columbia's medal for popular biography by university chancellor Dr. Alan C. McGavin. The award was in recognition of the professor's book, Kootenay Brown, published by the Sidney firm of Gray's Publishing Ltd.

Hopes and Facts

THE PROSPECT OF SUCCESS for the federal government's plan for voluntary adherence by labor to a "guideline" increase of six per cent in wage settlements is so slight that it is difficult to believe that the government has any real confidence it will work. More credible is the suggestion that Ottawa may use the failure of the voluntary system to serve as a sound reason for the imposition of a mandatory limitation on wage increases. And with this would have to go similar enforced restrictions on prices and probably profits.

This could be the sequence of events if the inflationary situation continues to warrant strong action. There have been one or two slight falterings lately in the upward sweep of the spiral, but it is far too early to say that a peak or plateau is in sight. Certainly the demand for higher wages indicates no belief on the part of labor negotiators that this is happening, and their resulting action, of course, is an important factor in adding further impetus to the inflationary push which they — like everyone — are trying to avoid.

There has been questioning of the "arbitrary" figure of six per cent as the permissible limit for wage increases. The Prices and Incomes Commission describes it as composed of approximately 3½ per cent of expected inflation and 2½ per cent as a reward for increased productivity. Some of the criticism has apparently assumed the figure to be a firm order, rather than a guideline. As the latter, it presumably could be exceeded slightly if the general climate of the negotiation was in keeping with a six per cent goal.

But in the present circumstances, when demands so far exceed this baseline proposal, such a climate is not likely. The result may well be legislated ceilings—a last resort and an expensive way to achieve what might have been better done if freer communication and confidence had been established at the nation's bargaining tables.

One other factor must be considered. The government might discern, or attempt to discern, a flattening of the inflationary spiral sufficient to encourage a decision against direct restrictive action. World conditions, the trend in the United States, and other factors beyond Canadian control could bring this about, relieving Ottawa of the urgent need to impose restraints.

But at the moment this is entirely speculative, and the prospect that inflation will "cure itself" — as even some members of parliament have suggested — must be written off as an idle dream. Defeat of inflation requires domestic confidence and a national unity of purpose. So far we are paying the cost of our lack of these qualities in sufficient strength.

Indians Find Their Own Answers

WHILE LITTLE OF SUBSTANCE emerged from the recent Ottawa confrontation between federal cabinet members and 200 Indian leaders, Prime Minister Trudeau told the Indians that the federal government would not force any solution upon them. And this indeed was a departure from more than 100 years of Canadian Indian policy.

In the past Ottawa decreed and Indians largely acquiesced — mainly because the 250,000 Canadian Indians are scattered in several hundred small settlements between Bonavista and Vancouver Island, isolated and without the communication channels that might provide political muscle. But the federal government's proposal to do away with the old Indian Act and integrate Indian peoples into the broader society, economy and politics of the nation opened the floodgates of long-dormant Indian communications—both among their own people and the white society.

To date the results are not conclusive. For the first time, however, Indians are being seriously consulted by government. Perhaps this energizing of the Indian peoples was not merely a coincidental fall-out from the government's proposals. If so, it is probably one of the most successful examples of the participatory democracy which Mr. Trudeau promised the nation.

In the last decade the Department of Indian Affairs budget has jumped from $60 millions to $212 millions. This in itself is indicative of a change in attitude towards Indian problems. And while it is true that many federal proposals — especially the complete assimilation of Indians into the white society — do not meet with Indian approval, the native peoples themselves are beginning to articulate their own solutions. In the long run Indians are in charge of their own destiny. If there is growing awareness among Canadian Indians now, there is also hope that something new has been accomplished.

Swept Under the Red Tide

CASCADING EVENTS OF THE last half century had seemed to submerge the name of Alexander Kerensky to the depths of history from which it emerged briefly this week with his death at 89.

Generations have succeeded one another since he claimed the headlines of a world press concentrating on the events leading up to, including and following the vast upheaval that was the Bolshevik revolution of 1917. At one time he represented to capitalist nations a hope of stemming the tide of Lenin's transformation of a huge country from the near medievalism of the czarist regimes to the threatening proportions of a force bent on world revolution.

Those hopes faded as Kerensky's efforts failed to restore the country to government under socialism. The vacillations and indecisiveness of his short-lived government were no match for the determined thrust of the Leninists, supported by Trotsky and Stalin.

For years, from exile, he delivered his attacks on the Communists, but his pen had little influence on the ideological avalanche that had set in with his ouster. An aging man, he lived to see tremendous material strides taken by his homeland under what he considered the tyranny of its new rulers.

Speculation arises, occasionally, over the course history might have taken had his liberal socialist reformism been able to contain the huge social shifts launched by Lenin. The speculation is completely idle. The tide that had begun to run strongly in 1917 defied much more than Kerensky's strength. Today it shows scant evidence of any current he might have stirred in it.

Water Control Bill

Randolph Harding, M.P. for Kootenay West, moved an amendment to Bill C-144, introduced by the government for the management and control of water resources. The amendment would have added a clause No. 32 to the bill as follows:

"If any six persons make a complaint to the Minister of an offence under this act, the Minister shall investigate the complaint and make public his findings, and if there is prima facie evidence of an offence under the Act, the Minister shall institute court action."

The amendment was defeated 80 to 103. Of B.C. members voting, Liberals were solidly against the amendment, NDP members solidly for it. — Frank Snowsell, Kamloops.

Why Fuss About?

Whatever is the government fussing about with the postmen for? They are servants of the government and deliberately defy authority. Permissiveness in this respect is beyond common sense and it is time these people were told to get to work or they will be replaced by the armed forces. — George Brown, 3036 Cook.

FROM CALGARY

By JAMES H. GRAY

No Time for Work—Too Busy on Briefs

IF it is a punch in the nose Liberal politicians are looking for, the uttering of two words within the hearing of any oil industry executives will get it for them. The words are "participatory democracy" and the oilmen who have been participating have had it up to here. One executive recently returned from making a presentation in Ottawa put it this way: "The greatest drag on business efficiency and industrial productivity is the demand made on the time of key industry personnel by the federal government."

Gray

His point is that many highly paid and important employees are forced to spend so much time on presentations to government that they have little left for the work they are paid to do.

That is just the first complaint. The second is the conviction that the entire effort is a waste of time, that despite the government's call for dialogue nobody on the government side is really listening.

Expenditures of Time

"In the last five years we have spent an appalling amount of time just to counter government proposals which would drive us out of business," my informant said. "For example, there was the report of the Carter Commission. Our people worked for months on that one, analyzing it, running out numbers, making up our minds how it would affect us and what we should do about it.

"And not only our people. We had to call in outside consultants to do studies for us. It cost Canadian business millions of dollars worth of time and effort to demonstrate to the government that Carter was all wrong. Then when we turn our backs they hit us with something far worse than Carter — the Benson white paper. Then we have to go through the whole exercise all over again."

It is the amount of detailed work involved in the exercise that drives the tycoons up the wall. The procedure with the White Paper as with Carter was to turn it over to the lawyers, accountants and tax experts for the first go round. Once each individual expert had made his assessment, committees were formed to correlate all the opinions.

It took days stretching into weeks for the company teams to clarify the picture to their own satisfaction. Then they began circulating their ideas through the industry. Soon everybody was at interminable meetings at which all the proposals were examined all over again. In the end two things happened.

The companies all laboriously prepared their own briefs for submission to the government. Industry associations, drawing largely on the same people, hammered industry points of view together.

During the past six months, the interest and attention of the oil industry has been concentrated almost wholly on Benson. Last week several companies and industry groups carried the products of their brainstorming to Ottawa for submission to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

For the government and for Parliament itself, it was an unmixed public relations disaster. Better, in the immortal words of Joe Jacobs, they should all have stood in bed!

Five members of the committee, plus the chairman and a lone newspaper correspondent managed to get to the oil industry session. The industry spokesman tabled their briefs, made short statements and were politely questioned by a couple of Alberta members. The back room gnomes of the finance department passed up questions for the chairman to ask. Briefs that had taken months to prepare at the cost of thousands of dollars were processed in a matter of minutes.

Exercise in Futility

So far as the delegates facing the empty chairs and abandoned table were concerned, it had all been an exercise in what one called "essential futility." Like all tycoons, they take themselves and their industry seriously. It was a shattering blow to discover that no one else — the newspapers or the committee truants — seemed to.

But for the frazzled oilmen, the end of frustration is far from in sight. They all have their heads together again putting other briefs together for presentation to the Senate Finance Committee, the Department of Northern Affairs, the Department of Energy, the Department of Transport. Occasionally, they say, when they can fit it in between committee meetings they hope to find a little time to run their oil companies.

Letter to the Editor

Competent Through Years

The older women of Victoria and elsewhere, are being vastly discriminated against by businessmen, because of company policy of not hiring employees over a certain age bracket. I am speaking for the over 40 age group, (and there are many of us!) who must supplement the family income by taking a job outside the home. The prices of food and clothing for our families make this very necessary!

It is the older woman who has gone through the mill, and who knows the ins and outs of office routine, who can anticipate what the boss really wants done. Ability should count for something.

Give us older gals a break. We have the ability, the stamina and the sticking quality that most young folks of today just don't have. — Mrs. C. Doroz, 1739 Lee Ave.

FROM UNITED NATIONS, N.Y.

By WILLIAM R. FRYE

U Thant Embarking on a Mission of Hope

UNITED Nations Secretary-General U Thant sets out tomorrow on a mission to London, the Hague and Moscow which could prove to be the diplomatic sleeper of the year. New peace initiatives are sorely needed in each of the world's two major conflicts: the Middle East and Vietnam. Previous settlement efforts have been largely frustrated; diplomats say they are at or near a dead end. It is a long shot, but there is just a possibility that Thant might be able to bring one or both of these conflicts to a meaningful bargaining table.

Frye

The secretary-general's maximum objective on the Middle East is an Arab-Israel negotiation under the auspices of his special representative for the area, Dr. Gunnar V. Jarring. Jarring is Swedish ambassador to Moscow.

On Vietnam, Thant's maximum objective is to enlist Moscow's aid in summoning a new Geneva Conference.

Both of these objectives have proved unattainable in the recent past, and may still be. But the UN, as a disinterested third party, can sometimes tip a delicate balance when interested governments cannot, and Thant is going to have a go at it.

Roadblocks Cleared

Two earlier roadblocks to a resumption of Jarring's Mideast mission have been partially cleared. The first was an Arab demand that Israel commit herself in principle to total withdrawal from territory conquered in 1967. The second was a dispute over whether Arab-Israel talks should be direct — face-to-face — or indirect, with Jarring as intermediary.

Israeli Premier Golda Meir has gone some distance toward meeting the Arab view on these points. On May 26, she reaffirmed that Israel accepts a UN resolution of November 1967 calling for a negotiated withdrawal "from territories occupied in the recent conflict."

The resolution did not say "all" territories occupied, but it implied that most of the area, if not all of it, would be surrendered in return for Arab concessions.

On indirect negotiations, Mrs. Meir hinted that Israel might be prepared to accept a tri-cornered arrangement under Jarring.

These two gestures did not close the gap entirely. The Arabs wanted more explicit assurances on both points. But even this much indication of possible movement may encourage Jarring to try, once again, to bring the parties into a triangular exchange.

Before resuming this effort, Jarring wanted the Big Four to provide him with a detailed "basis" for negotiation which he could have offered to the parties and in which they, by prearrangement, could have acquiesced. This would have eliminated many preliminary hurdles.

But the Four have not been able to do this, and many here now feel that Jarring himself will have to undertake the task. He has felt it would be unwise for him to become, even in part, a participant in the negotiations, but Thant may seek to change his mind. Plainly, there is at this stage no feasible alternative.

Chances of success in the second of Thant's principal objectives — reviving the Geneva Conference — are even more remote. But they are not entirely nonexistent.

In the eight weeks since Moscow said it considered such a conference "unrealistic at the present time," the United States and South Vietnam have swept through the Cambodian sanctuaries, altering the military balance in the allies' favor; the pro-western government of Cambodia has proved (with outside help) to be no push-over; and the South Vietnamese army has unexpectedly demonstrated considerable ability to fight on its own.

New Motive

There is, in short, new motive for the Communists to negotiate. There is both military and political advantage to be gained at the conference table.

Moreover, the Reds are neither so weak that to go to a conference would be to surrender, nor so strong that they would have little to gain from negotiating. It is a good time for a Geneva Conference, and Thant is likely to see if Moscow can be persuaded of that fact.

The soft-spoken Burmese diplomat would be the first to acknowledge that he is no miracle-worker. But he does have one important thing going for him: he is an independent entity to whom concessions can be made without loss of face. Once before, during the Cuba-missile crisis, the Kremlin used him in that role.

If the Russians wish to pull back from the brink in the Mideast or seek a neutralized Indo-China, they might well prefer to say so in the first instance to the UN rather than to the West.

Should Thant pull off either or both of these achievements — peace talks for the Mideast and/or Indo-China — the UN's 25th anniversary year would be celebrated in a very different atmosphere from the one now prevailing.

Nature Rambles

By FREEMAN KING

If you are driving to Miracle Beach for a camping trip you will see many changes on the way north. You come to areas where the lodge pole pine is growing tall and straight and places where the hemlock is predominant, with garry oak and arbutus gradually becoming sparser.

Further north, particularly by Black Creek, the roadside banks are a mass of thimbleberry thickets, with their showy white blooms, and where the ditches are moist the yellow mimulas are in abundance.

Stop along the highway at Merville and look across the valley at the mountains. Here is a wonderful sight, with the tops covered with snow. You will be able to see part of the Comox glacier and lower down the new green of second growth forest, while on the valley floor you will see maples and alders of different colors.

In the foreground are the green pastures and farm lands providing an atmosphere of peacefulness.

It is difficult to remember that the fresh green scene of today was, a relatively few years ago, a desolation of black stumps and tall, burned-out snags. The jungle has reclaimed its own.

When you get to the campsite be sure to wander along the beach. Before you go down, drop in at the Nature House and get a very attractive booklet called "Shore Things" by David Sterling. It will give you lots of information on what you can find in this particular habitat.

As you go down the trail, stop and examine the Douglas maples. See how small scarlet spots are placed on both sides of some leaves. This lends them a particular attractiveness.

When you get down to the beach look at the huge pile of logs and see how plant life has taken hold between the logs. There are grasses, beach pea, gumweed and wormwood. Now look inland. Behind the present logs there are some very old rotting trunks that will tell you that at one time many years ago this was the beach head. As time goes on the upper beach will be covered with duff left by the plants and so a new forest line will establish itself.

New beach heads will be formed and in some places they will become steeper. Perhaps some sand and gravel bars will be formed offshore and create a new place for logs to become stranded, thus making new foreshores. This can be repeated again and again over the eons of time.

Look across the water. Low to the north in the haze you will see Mitlenach Island. This too is a provincial park and it is a bird nesting colony. During the summer months there are park naturalist living there.

Party Funds Reform Due

By DOUGLAS FISHER

There was a small ripple of comment, most of it favorable, when the government recently introduced proposals to change the Election Act.

The notable changes would lower the voting age to 18 and require the placing of the candidate's party affiliation on the ballot. A less noticeable amendment which would provide rather severe penalties for anyone caught ripping down a candidate's poster seems to promise lots of future election-time wrangles.

The surprising aspect of the press comment about the reforms is the general censure of the government for failing to bring in changes on fund-raising and spending. Some 16 papers out of a score whose pages I canvassed regretted this failure.

Report Forgotten?

The question runs: Has the government forgotten the report of the committee on election expenses, published in two volumes late in 1966?

The government, through House leader Donald Macdonald, is shocked at suggestions it has forgotten the report. He recapitulates that it is an involved question, requiring complex changes, perhaps a switch to subsidies for candidates (as is done in Quebec elections) and there hasn't been time to accomplish all this.

And so we get into the Macdonald litany of a packed Parliamentary schedule, too busy committees and the whole matter of priorities.

This hoary response arouses suspicion among moralists.

I believe that there is neither antagonism nor enthusiasm in the Trudeau ministry about party fund-raising.

The best way to get action would be public uproar. Unfortunately a scandal is unlikely at this mid-term time. The present practices do have advantages for the party in power. A diffused belief by those much interested in politics that there must be reform may have a mild moral suasion. This is not worth much in forcing change.

Our parties require funds for three purposes: To fight elections; to sustain a party organization between elections; to provide expertise and research for party leaders and MPs through the life of a Parliament.

Trends Sharpened

There have been several developments and the sharpening of a few trends since the committee on election expenses reported.

Firstly, the committee did not deal with the money problem which emerged in the fervor of the leadership contests of the two old parties in 1967 and 1968. Some of the candidates blew over $100,000.

Candidates like Pierre Trudeau and Paul Hellyer flew around the country in planes owned by large corporations. Both the winners and the runners-up were wealthy men.

Secondly, the spread of cablevision has added more to the dimensions of both coverage and costs. Thirdly, the Liberals tried seriously to raise funds on a mass basis through their central office, using a direct mail campaign. It bombed.

Fourthly, all the parties are turning to the promotion of "think" conferences to stimulate interest in the party and interest in the party policy. These are expensive.

Finally, a trend noted by the committee has grown stronger. Provincial parties find it easier and easier to raise money. Gradually they have slipped out of dependency on the federal parties. Clearly, the Robarts' Conservatives find it easier to raise funds than the Stanfield Conservatives. The same could be said about the Thatcher Liberals vis-a-vis the Trudeau Liberals so far as the latter operate in Saskatchewan.

The committee determined that most of the money needed to sustain the NDP came from a few major trade unions. The two old parties drew their funds from a few (less than a hundred) corporations based in Toronto and Montreal. It also recognized that subsidiaries of large foreign corporations were important contributors.

Mystery Figures

The fund-raisers were comparatively mysterious figures and few in number, their directing agent being an appointee on the party leader.

Senior party organizers I have spoken with recently are optimistic — more so than I think they should be — about broadening the base of givers to their party.

I believe that none of the recent developments including the optimism about mass-giving has taken anything away from the merits of the committee's 1966 recommendations.

In brief these were:

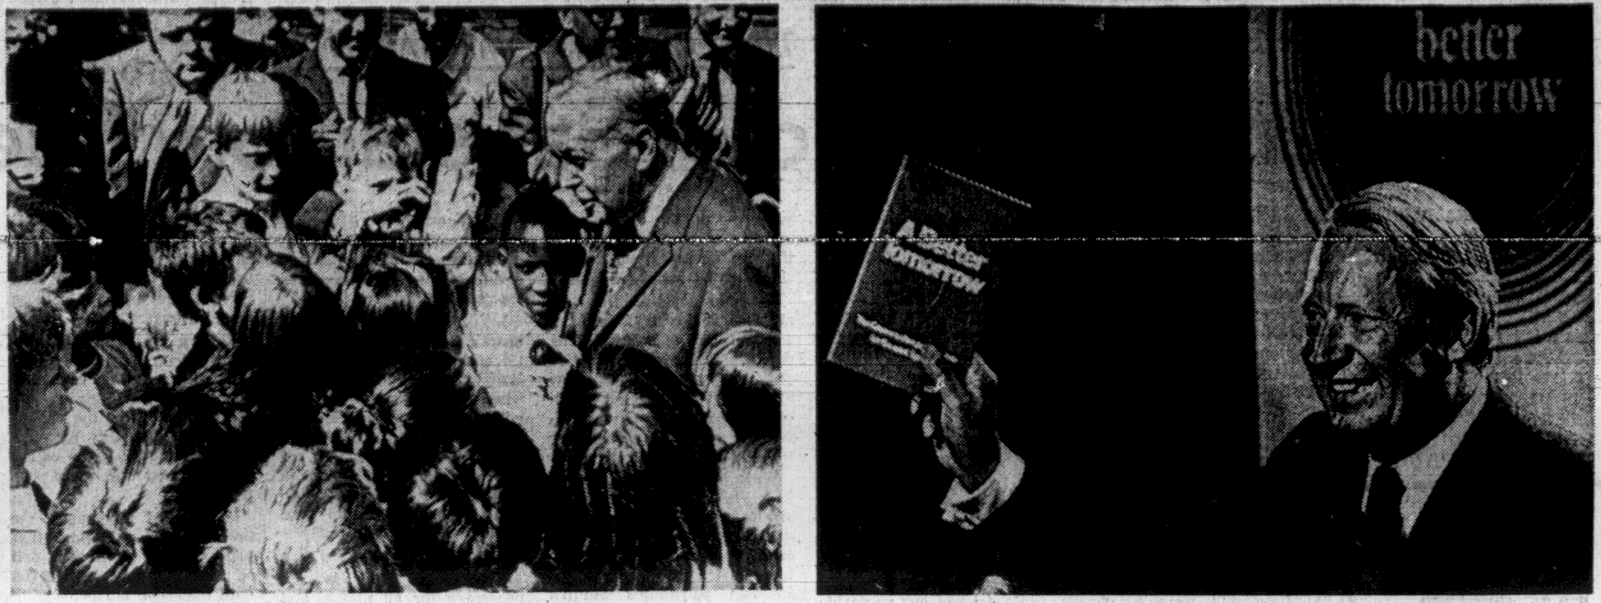
(A) The legal recognition of parties, making them legally responsible for their actions in raising and spending funds;

(B) Each candidate who gets 15 per cent or more of the vote would get two cents subsidy per elector;

(C) There would be a 10 cent per elector ceiling on constituency spending.

Professor Paltiel, the research director for the committee, has pointed out that these changes are not revolutionary. They would not change the style of Canadian political campaigns.

The simple conclusion I can give this run through the problem of party funds is that it will take a miracle of aroused public pressure if we are to get reforms before the next general election.



Campaigning leaders Harold Wilson and Edward Heath have had little to say about Britain's world problems.

Whoever Wins, U.K. Foreign Policy Won't Change

By ROBERT STEPHENS

LONDON — What difference would a change of government make to Britain's role in world affairs?

There is little guidance on this question in the manifestos of the three main parties. Neither these documents nor the speeches of the party leaders so far clearly identify the really basic world issues which Britain, like all other countries, has to face — such as race, the spread of nuclear weapons, the prevention of war — let alone suggest the contribution Britain might make to dealing with them.

The perfunctory attention given to foreign affairs in all the three party programs — a couple of paragraphs of generalities about joining the European Common Market, supporting the United Nations, strengthening the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and the Commonwealth (though the last word is not mentioned by the small Liberal Party) presumably reflects first of all the politicians' assumption that foreign policy does not win votes.

●

It is also a sign that the bipartisan character of British foreign policy established since World War II on all main issues — with the partial exception of dealing with anti-imperialist movements in the Middle East and Africa — is still largely maintained.

As in domestic affairs, differences on foreign policy within the Labour and Conservative Parties are often greater than between the official policies and leaderships of the parties themselves.

Both the left wing of the the imperialist and "Gaullist" governing Labour Party and right wing of the Conservatives hold views on relations with the United States, on nuclear weapons and on dealing with the Afro-Asian Third World which are further from the views of their respective party leaderships than are those of the Prime Minister, Harold Wilson, the Conservative leader, Edward Heath from each other.

The broad area of consensus between the party leaderships is a response both to the same middle ground of voters and to the same set of international circumstances when in power. This similarity has long blurred the older images of Labour as the party of idealistic and rather woolly internationalism and of the Conservaties as the hard-headed defenders of the national and imperial interest. For both parties real-politik is combined with emotion, and with a judgment of how much on any subject public opinion in Britain will stand.

Labour has shown a growing readiness to subordinate sentiment to what it takes to be broad national interests, as in its dealings with the United States over Vietnam, or over South Africa and Rhodesia. On the other hand, Conservative realism is not free from the colouring of emotion when a withdrawal from the last outposts of empire is concerned or when quesions of "kith and kin", as in Rhodesia, are evoked.

The different balance between realism and sentiment on different questions is what primarily distinguishes the approach of the parties to foreign affairs. But the differences, sometimes stressed for tactical purposes, are largely matters of tone or flavor and are often more apparent than real.

This is the case in the parties' approach to the first two big foreign policy questions facing the next government — the negotiations for British entry into the European Common Market and the withdrawal of British forces from East of Suez by next year.

●

All three parties are committed to the Common Market negotiations due to open by the end of this month. But none of them is for entry at any price. Even the Liberals, who are the most enthusiastic and total in their commitment to European political as well as economic unity, are prepared if necessary to fall back on the second-best solution of freer international trade.

Labour and the Conservatives have been driven towards entry into the Common Market by the same mixture of motives: the desire to share the benefits of an expanding large-scale market and the fear of exclusion from a big European political group and embryo State forming on the Continent.

The latter is, of course, an old British nightmare which has become more alarming since Britain has lost the ability to balance the weight of a European coalition by the extension of her own power overseas.

But there is almost no public discussion by the parties of the real political problems involved in membership of a more closely unified Western European community. How, for example, can Western Germany be more closely integrated into such a Community and at the same time move towards closer relations with Eastern Germany and so gradually overcome the East-West partition of Europe?

How will "going into Europe" really affect Britain's relations with the United States her nuclear status or her ability to play a constructive part in helping to keep the peace outside Europe?

●

The Conservatives have at times appeared to be contemplating a more drastic change than has Labour in Britain's present nuclear position and in her relations with America. They have hinted at approval for the creation of an Anglo-French nuclear partnership to form a "European deterrent" and for a Europe which would be more independent of the United States.

But the Conservative manifesto calls for continued independent control of British nuclear weapons, and when pressed Heath has usually conceded that his "European" idea would still mean keeping the British nuclear weapon inside NATO and linked with the United States, so that it is really no different from the present policy of Mr. Wilson.

●

The attempt to give Conservative policy a more "Gaullist" slant in this respect seems to have been intended partly to appease part of the Conservative party and also to arouse the interest of the French.

The Labour Party, which once proposed the abolition of the British independent nuclear deterrent and then went on to complete the building of four Polaris missile submarines, deals with its own party heretics — or perhaps its own conscience — by leaving out from its manifesto any mention at all of nuclear weapons.

On the second imminent issue of withdrawal East of Suez, the Conservatives have appeared to be offering a different policy from Labour. They have accused the Labour government of exposing Britain's friends and interests to "unacceptable risk" by its commitment to withdraw British forces from Singapore and Malaysia and the Persian Gulf by the end of 1971.

●

They have proposed British participation in a five-Power defence force in South-East Asia, together with Australia, New Zealand, Malaysia and Singapore. They have also hinted that they would reverse the withdrawal from the Persian Gulf.

But, on closer examination, Heath's plan for South-East Asia does not look very different from the Labour policy of continuing military co-operation and support in the area with forces based on Britain and Europe. In neither case is it conceivable that Britain could make a major contribution to the land defence of South-East Asia, a task from which even the United States is now recoiling.

As far as the Persian Gulf is concerned, there is little doubt that a reversal of the British military withdrawal would be both difficult in practice and politically a mistake. It would undermine the attempts now being made to create a new stable political framework in the Gulf by federation of the smaller Arab States in the area, and by an understanding between the Arab States and Iran.

Labour's decision to abandon Mr. Wilson's original plans for a long-term British role "East of Suez" as a junior partner of the United States was a realistic adjustment to Britain's limited economic resources.

It was also a recognition of the anti-imperialist political climate in Afro-Asia and the political implications of a British move towards Europe. Although the Conservatives have usually been slower to understand political currents in the Afro-Asian countries, they seem unlikely to try seriously to reverse the Labour policy.

●

Indeed, the greater danger is that both parties will increasingly adopt a more parochial outlook and ignore the huge new problems of organizing international (and therefore British) security created by the inevitable collapse of the old imperial order, the rise of the American and Soviet super-powers, and the spread of nuclear weapons.

Expected of Them, Y'Know

By ART STOTT

For almost 40 years the lady in our house and I have shared with a few friends of long-standing a sort of family joke about the manufactured feud between Oak Bay and Victoria High Schools. Pat cut her niche in the junior track annals of Victoria High. I passed inconspicuously through Oak Bay — and have been trying to make up vocally for the inconspicuousness ever since.

It was the great good fortune of our children to also pass through Oak Bay High, which has given me a working majority under our roof in the continuing running battle. Pat has to recruit such people as former Victoria High School principals and a deputy premier to support her side.

★ ★ ★

At the University of Victoria degree-granting convocation the other day, high tribute was paid to the winner of the Governor-General's gold medal, top graduate at the institution. In the course of the tribute her schools of earlier study were listed, and with what seemed to me to be a lapse of caution, Pat murmured, "From Oak Bay High."

In a carefully restrained display of one-upmanship, hardly supercilious at all, I replied, "Natch-rully."

And when the guest receiving the honorary doctorate and giving the speech of the day referred to Oak Bay associations, I permitted myself a delicate "Of course."

All in all, I came off rather well on the day's round.

We Oak Bay people do not, of course, win them all. That wouldn't be sporting. It's essential, from a point of noblesse oblige, to permit others to share the laurels — the democratic thing to do, so to speak, and rather essential if one is to preserve the courtesies.

★ ★ ★

When we have retired from our mock-battle ground, we privately agree that Oak Bay High has enjoyed a measure of success academically and otherwise which is a source of genuine pride. There are practical explanations for the record. It is generally conceded that economic advantage gives a child and a school certain benefits that, properly handled, are reflected in higher performance. This is not snobbery. It is the finding of research and experience, and it does not mean that the child of a less affluent family cannot be an outstanding scholar. Oak Bay has an economic edge.

It also seems to have been given the direction needed to capitalize on that asset. The direction depends basically on the staff and the man in charge. Most recently, until his retirement, that man has been Jack Wallace — who, I must say to keep up the charade of the family argument, has come a long way since his matriculation from Victoria High School. (Pat doesn't let me overlook that element in his preparation for teaching — the last third of a century of it at Oak Bay High.)

It may sound odd to the under-thirties, who know what's wrong with our world and recognize that anything prior to their own interest in affairs is obsolete, that Oak Bay has preserved a tradition. In spite of, or because of that anachronism, it has enjoyed better than average success through the accomplishments of students it has taught. That, to some, may also be pretty bad. What's success in a bourgeois, middle class world?

To unregenerate Oak Bay old boys, it's a good show.

Next Friday the old boys, the old girls, the young boys and young girls, staff, present and past, and friends, hope to show their appreciation, at a home-coming in classrooms of the school, to Jack for the job he's done. There'll be a presentation to the retired principal and his wife Peggy, speeches and re-union activity. Don Oliver will tell anybody who wants to know about the detailed arrangements.

★ ★ ★

I don't know how Jack Wallace looks back on the years he has given to teaching or to guiding the high school. I'd guess he counts them well spent, preparing himself from childhood at Spring Ridge, George Jay, Victoria High, Victoria College, Victoria Normal and finally at UBC.

He has never told me about the years when he, like others of his pedagogical generation, hit the sticks to teach country school before returning to the city. But the quiet way in which he has gone about his duties at Oak Bay, the effectiveness of his help to seniors before he took the top job himself, and the loyalty he has inspired among those he worked with leaves the impression that the experience was highly valuable. In and out of school he's taught by example the lesson of good citzenship.

★ ★ ★

It seems to me that Friday might be an evening to circle on my calendar. Just possibly I could induce the Victoria High School matriculant who has shared my roof to attend with me. Then we could seek out a quiet corner and she could perhaps enlist a younger Wallace brother, who parts his hair more widely than I do, to champion the cause of Victoria High School in a debate with me. An older Wallace brother, who held Uvic together in time of stress might officiate as referee. And if the referee seemed biased, since he also went to Victoria High, I might seek the help of the middle Wallace boy who, despite that impediment, saw the errors of his student high school ways, accepted conversion and became one of the Oak Bay anointed. Under the circumstances of the evening, he'd have to be on my side.

"I don't buy an engagement ring often. Like just this once. So I really checked every jeweller in town. Birks was the last on my list because I thought everything would look as though it were designed for Great Aunt Harriet.

Not so. We found a wide-band, way-out setting we hadn't seen anywhere else. There were a couple of diamonds in it that were just a bit much for my budget so the man put in two others a little less expensive but the same size. (Birks now has diamonds of different qualities at prices to match.) And what I learned about diamonds would put anyone in his right mind off bargains and so-called wholesale deals forever!

TIPS FOR THE HOME GARDENER

Gardeners Assured of Satisfactory Seed Purchase

By JACK BEASTALL

In grandfather's day there were few problems associated with collecting seed in the home garden. The general run of seeds available at that time were of low quality and it paid the gardener to select and reselect from his own plants to improve the strain.

Things are different today. All seed produced for sale must conform to regulations set out in the Seed Act and this assures the gardener of a satisfactory purchase.

It is more difficult to save one's own seed today because we have hybrids and further generations of hybrids, and these plants are not easy to repeat in the home garden.

In broad terms, a hybrid is the result of crossing two species, accidentally or intentionally. Intentional crossing, or hybridizing, is done to combine desirable characteristics and eliminate faults.

All hybridizing follows a set law announced by Johann Gregor Mendel in 1865. His findings were not accepted at the time, but were proved correct by three others some 35 years later. It is the law of heredity, called Mendel's Law or Mendelism.

•

Basically, it amounts to this; when two plants are crossed all the first generation will be exactly alike. These are the seeds listed in catalogs as F-1 hybrids.

When an F-1 hybrid is back crossed with one of the parents the characteristics are split in a definite way. A percentage will be like one parent and a percentage like the other, but the majority will be different to either parent, and from this group will be selected the plants exhibiting the characteristics the breeder is seeking.

This may over-simplify the matter, but it goes far enough to show that the seed produced by a hybrid plant will not give seedlings like itself.

To obtain more seed of an F-1 hybrid the original cross has to be made each year. When grown in the garden, seed is produced by open pollination which makes this seed an F-2 hybrid in which the F-1 characteristics have been split and combined in other ways.

•

This clearly shows that the home gardener gains nothing from saving the seed of any hybrid plant, unless he is interested in a breeding program.

Quite a lot of our vegetable plants have never been hybridized, although they are improvements or selections. A selection results from noting slight variations in a row of plants, such as earlier blooming, heavier bearing, larger flowers and so forth, and saving the seed of these selected plants.

When this is done year after year, the quality of the stock can be greatly improved, and this is something within the scope of the home gardener.

Seeds produced in this way are marketed as improved, selected, or re-selected. The original Laxton's Progress pea, for example, is now available as a selected strain called Laxton's Progress Improved, and it is far superior to the original.

When buying seed it pays to look for these improved strains. Sometimes we find a distinct departure which the seed producer puts out under his own name, such as Primula polyanthus Smith's Strain.

The seed of some of our garden plants is worth saving and will germinate freely when sown as soon as it is ripe, but once it goes into dormancy germination can be difficult and uncertain.

The same kind of seeds are to be found in seed display racks and are the kind with which gardeners have difficulties. It is not a case of poor seed, but rather delayed dormancy which requires special treatment to break.

In this class we find the beautiful Blue Poppy of Tibet (Meconopsis betonicifolia var. Baileyi); all primulas whether one flower to stem or with heads of many flowers; the Hellebores (Christmas and Lenten Rose); the red perennial lobelias (Lobelia fulgens and cardinalis). All these germinate readily from fresh seed.

•

But fresh seed is not necessary for all plants, and there are some worth growing from home saved seed for no other reason than the many desirable color combinations and markings that appear in the seedlings.

The dianthus family is one in this group. It includes the border pinks, clove pinks, border carnations, sweet william, and the beautifully fragrant Dianthus "Loveliness" with its deeply laciniated, or fringed, petals. Quite often home saved seed gives plants superior to those from purchased seed.

Now, a tip on saving seed. We gardeners generally pick all the flowers, or peas and beans, we need during the season, and leave the end-of-the-season leftovers for next year's seed. This gives us the poorest seed the plant can produce.

When seed is wanted, the first perfect flowers that appear should be marked, and all other flowers removed until that seed is ripe.

In the case of peas and beans, the plant to bear seed is selected as soon as the first pods have been sampled and found satisfactory. That one vine is then reserved for seed production and the growing tip nipped out when enough pods have set to fill our requirements.

Seed production takes more energy from the plant than any other function it performs, for into each seed must be packed everything needed to make a new plant.

Those plants we select for seed production must be royally treated and not allowed to over produce if quality is to be maintained.

WEEK'S WORK

Tulips and daffodils can have leaves cut off when they are becoming yellow and wilted. Tulips are better if lifted each year, daffs every third year when in beds.

Soak peonies well and mulch around with old manure and compost. Continue occasional soaking during summer for best results of fine colorful foliage in Spetember.

Should be sweet peas for flower shows if seed started early. Keep blooms picked to prevent seed pods forming.

Sow seed outdoors in part shade of pansies and violas for next spring's plants.

Female flowers with pod can be removed from tuberous begonias, especially the large doubles.

Syringe with a water spray on dense conifers, junipers, cypress and similar. This done with the hose in dry weather will discourage red spider infestations. See that all these plants get adequate water in first few years after planting.

Sow seed of white summer turnip, kohl rabi, Chinese cabbage; also in a seed bed the seed of broccoli and cabbage for fall.

STAMP NEWS

Louis Riel Stamp Due June 19

By ROBERT G. OLIPHANT

June 19 will be the date on which Canada will release a 6-cent commemorative featuring a portrait of the Canadian Metis Louis Riel.

Riel was born in St. Boniface on Oct. 23, 1844. He had Franco-Indian and Irish blood. A few of his early years were spent learning in a Montreal college.

In 1869, Canada was arranging for its acquisition of most of the vast territory (which included present day Manitoba) held by the Hudson's Bay Co. The inflow of settlers and surveyors into Manitoba's Red River settlement made the Metis (who formed the majority of the area's population) to fear for the loss of their lands, customs, livelihood, etc. Also, they weren't even consulted on the HBC land transfer. The Red River Rebellion (1869-70) was born.

The Metis, led by Riel, occupied the bastion of Fort Garry (now Winnipeg), and they formed a provisional government. Despite a number of incidents, notably the unfortunate execution of Thomas Scott, a defiant Orangeman, at Fort Garry on March 4, 1870, Manitoba entered confederation as the fifth province, in July, 1870. Most of the Metis rights were honored.

Louis Riel was banished from Canada in 1875, for a period of five years. Previously he was ejected from the House of Commons, to which he was twice elected (in 1873 and 1874). He spent some time in insane asylums, and in 1879 he settled down in Montana, marrying Marguerite Bellimeure there in 1881. His residence in Montana ended in 1884 when he was called back to Canada by the Metis, who again had a number of legitimate grievances against the federal government.

The violent Northwest Rebellion ensued in 1885. It terminated with the defeat of Riel at Batoche. Found guilty of treason, he was hanged in Regina on Nov. 16, 1885.

The Riel adhesive was designed by Reinhard Derreth of Vancouver, and it was gravure printed in blue and red by the British American Bank Note Co. Ltd., Ottawa.

Gibraltar's 2-shilling "Europa" pictoria came out June 8.

A 60-ore stamp placed on sale May 28 by Denmark marks the 300th anniversary of the Jaegersborg Deer Park.

On June 8, the day before the actual 100th anniversary of the death of Charles Dickens, St. Lucia issued four lithographed pictorials. Of a common design, they depict a portrait of Dickens, and show some of the characters which he made famous. (Values: 1c, 25, 35c and 50c).

All Foreigners To Leave Jordan

By THE CANADIAN PRESS

About 200 foreign nationals were hoping to fly out today from battle-scarred Amman—now returning slowly to normal after three days of fighting between Jodanian troops and Palestinian commandos which left at least 700 people dead or wounded and threatened King Hussein's throne.

About 300 foreigners, mostly American and West German women and children, were evacuated Friday to Beirut, Lebanon, and Athens in chartered aircraft plastered with Red Cross insignia.

They included about 70 persons of various nationalities, including Canadians, released unharmed earlier in the day after being held hostage for three days in two big hotels in the Jordanian capital by guerrillas of the radical Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine.

Most of the foreigners unable to fly out in the first evacuation aircraft were Britons and a handful of Americans.

The first evacuation planes landed in Beirut as left-wing demonstrators there set fire to the Jordanian embassy, damaging part of the building, after marching through the city chanting "death to Hussein."

KING MEETS ADVISERS

King Hussein himself spent the day conferring with Iraqi and Algerian emissaries in Amman, and drawing up with his advisors the new policy he must follow in the wake of the commandos' moral victory in getting him to dismiss his two top military commanders.

The guerrillas regarded the pair—the king's uncle, Maj.-Gen. Sharif Nasser Bin Jamil, supreme commander of the armed forces, and his cousin, Maj.-Gen. Zeid Bin Shaker, commander of the 3rd Armored Division—as hostile to their cause.

The king, however, warned when announcing his sacrifice of the two generals that this was his last concession to the guerrillas.

Observers believed that the king, by going a long way toward meeting guerrilla demands, now was in a stronger position to secure the backing of other Arab countries in getting the commandos to co-operate and head off any further clashes with troops.

The latest crisis was by far the most severe of a series of similar outbursts in Jordan. It was noted that the casualty toll of 1,000 dead or wounded this week was higher than total Jordanian casualties in the June, 1967, war with Israel, when an estimated 500 Jordanians were killed or wounded.

The commandos so far have responded positively to the king's latest moves. The Popular Front leader, George Habash, told the foreign hostages before their release that "all our demands have been met."

ISSUES PROCLAMATION

And the newly-created central committee of the Palestine Resistance Movement issued a proclamation in which it significantly exempted blaming the king and the government for the crisis.

Instead, it castigated what it termed "hostile and conspiratorial elements" in the army.

The Weather and You

By CARL RIBLET JR.

Nature has arranged for a way to seasonally halt the aging process—in soil. It does it with weather.

Weathering, just like almost all chemical processes, is greatly accelerated by heat and moisture. Very old soil isn't as fertile as younger soil and the weather, not chronological age, is mostly to blame.

In a climate where the soil freezes, the chemical changes almost stand still every winter. Way down south where the soil doesn't freeze and where the temperatures are high, the weathering process in the soil is speeded up, spcially if there is lots of moisture.

So you can see how weathering affects the soil. More heat and moisture age it more rapidly. The older the soil the more decay it has undergone and the more it has been leached of its fertility by the moisture—water. The farming soil in the far north is, therefore, younger than the farming soil in the far south.

Aging has been arrested by freezing.

UN Security Council Plans High-Level Trouble Talks

UNITED NATIONS (Reuters) — The Security Council, in a major advance, agreed unanimously Friday night to hold periodic meetings at high ministerial level to review world problems.

Although the United Nations charter specifically provides for such sessions, none has been held in the 25-year history of the world body, principally because of cold war-inducted divisions among the great powers which are members of the council.

The decision was seen as a recognition that the cold war impediment no longer exists.

The first top-level Security Council meeting, expected to be attended by State Secretary William P. Rogers of the United States and the foreign ministers of Russia, Britain and France, as well as those of the 11 other member countries, will take place during the 25th General Assembly which opens Sept. 15.

How to get your wife into a Volkswagen.

Have you shied away from a Volkswagen because your wife shies away from a stickshift?

Does she appreciate the economical idea of a VW, but not the way the idea looks?

We are happy to be able to tell you that we have solved this age-old problem in the age-old manner: by giving Woman everything she wants.

The solution: A Volkswagen that (A) doesn't have any nasty gears to shift. And (B) doesn't look like a Volkswagen.

The VW Squareback Sedan.

The Squareback (along with our Fastback and Notchback Sedans) is available with fully automatic transmission.

All your wife has to do is put it in Drive, and drive. Which tends to leave her with more time on her hands for more important things: like steering.

She'll also like the way kids, dogs and groceries fit nicely into the back. (The big rear door swings up, out of the way.) And the fact that the Squareback fits nicely into the same parking space as the beetle.

Of course, because the Squareback has electronic fuel injection and enough room to carry camping gear, lumber or lawnmowers, you'll probably want to borrow it a lot.

Which poses a whole new problem: Getting your wife out of a Volkswagen.

The Volkswagen Squareback.

He's Been Working Downhill From Instant Stardom

By GARY ARNOLD

During his appearance on "The David Frost Show" Orson Welles recalled his professional theatrical debut, at the age of 16, in Dublin:

"I had a scholarship to Harvard . . . I'd been painting in Ireland and it got to be winter and the days were getting short and so was my money and I knew I was going to have to go back to America and go to a dreaded school of learning. So I went backstage to the Gate Theatre and told them I was a famous star from the New York Theatre Guild, and just for the fun of it I'd like to stay with them and play a few leading roles.

"Now, you can only do that if you don't believe it matters. I had no desire to be an actor. If I had, I would have said, 'could I have a spear to hold?' It was ridiculous I would be an actor, so I just said I am a leading actor . . . I played a star part the first time I ever walked on a stage. And I have been working my way down ever since."

Welles is now 55 and looks rather like Jackie Gleason. On television he seemed jolly and good-humored, but somehow he managed to fend off Frost's worst invitations to sentimentality, all the leading questions about God and love and his proudest achievements.

The working-down process is fairly common in the history of American movies, and television talk shows appear to be a device for speeding it up, encouraging all once, near and or still great personalities in every field to become identical softies with the general public.

Fortunately, some personalities are singular enough to retain a core of integrity or aspiration or self-respect or protean energy. Welles is one of these.

Even as a popular actor of stage, screen and radio, as the expression used to go, he was never a comfortable, reassuring presence. If anything, he was famous for too much presence and power, and the obvious symbol was that big, sonorous voice, now a feature of Eastern Air Lines commercials.

Still, Welles is a little too imposing to get worked down all the way; for example, his voice tends to backfire on those commercials, giving the message more mythological resonance than it needs.

In some basic, temperamental respect, Welles isn't quite consumable. Despite his resources as an entertainer and raconteur and the disasters of his career and the temptations of easy crowd-pleasing on TV, he hasn't slipped irrevocably into popular, self-deprecating caricature. He hasn't lost the artist's urge and drive, though he has lost the freedom and financial resources necessary to make the most of them.

Welles enjoyed carte blanche on his first production, "Citizen Kane," which began shooting at RKO 30 years ago this month, but it was also the last time he enjoyed carte blanche. Since the mid-40s, he has make only one feature in the U.S., the very garish and very amusing 1958 thriller "Touch of Evil."

Like every director, he's lost a lot of time in projects that never panned out. But, in addition, the films he made in exile in Europe have peculiar inadequacies — of sound and piecemeal shooting — that drive you up the wall if you aren't prepared for them. Sometimes, as in "The Trial," not even preparation helps, you.

Talking about his work a decade ago, Welles remarked that he probably had no peer with the camera but that he couldn't get the sort of thing de Sica achieved in "Shoeshine" — the illusion that the camera had vanished, that we were apprehending life itself.

It's an observation commonly used against him, but he's always been conscious of this tendency, particularly in his acting style. (One often wishes he were more conscious of it while performing — his Rochester in "Jane Eyre" is a case in point.)

ORSON WELLES

Welles was a bonafide child prodigy. Before he passed himself off as a 25-year-old leading man at the Gate Theatre, he had wowed parents and friends and teachers with an incredible array of talents.

He always looked and sounded older than his years and had mastered reading and writing and painting and prestidigitation at very tender years.

His father was an inventor and successful industrialist, his mother a noted concert pianist. Welles grew up in a prosperous and artistic atmosphere, combining formidable native talent with a formidable sense of self-confidence.

By the time he really was 25 and on his way to Hollywood, Welles was already a theatrical star, a famous director (with the Federal Theatre Project and his own Mercury Theatre), a radio personality (with "The Shadow" and "The Mercury Theatre of the Air") and a national sensation (with his 1938 Halloween night broadcast of "The War of the Worlds").

One of the things that makes "Citizen Kane" so enjoyable and durable is the utter self-confidence and chutzpah behind it, but these things have also colored his reputation. Like his voice, his film techniques may seem ingenious or overpowering yet somehow shallow, incapable of simplicity of feeling.

The charge is undoubtedly true, but it's also true that Welles had too few occasions to develop his theatricality on complex realistic material.

"The Magnificent Ambersons" was one of those occasions, and during the sustained dramatic scenes you should be able to sense the direction Welles' work might have taken: an intensely theatrical and resonant illusion of life itself.

The Genius of Jazz Who Goes His Own Way

By PETER BENCHLEY

As Miles Davis sees it, an audience's function is to listen. If they want anything more than sound, they can go somewhere else.

He never announces the titles of his numbers. He never acknowledges applause. He never plays encores. When he is through with a set, he walks off the stage, eyes straight ahead.

"We don't play to be seen," he says flatly. "I'm addicted to music, not audiences."

Every musician should be so addicted. It is through this single-minded pursuit of perfection that Davis's genius has flowered. At the relatively tender age of 44, he is a grand master of the art of jazz — a trumpeter without peer and a performer widely recognized as one of the most influential jazz musicians of the century.

●

He does not bend to the times; he makes the times bend to him. Few established jazz men would assault the youth bastion of hard-rock, the Fillmore East in New York. But by the time Davis's combo had finished two nights there recently blowing its passionate, intricate and always innovative sound, legions of youngsters were on their feet roaring for more.

Characteristically, Davis just strolled offstage.

"Miles is a leader in jazz because he has definite confidence in what he likes and he is not afraid of what he likes," says an old friend. "A lot of other musicians are constantly looking around to hear what the next person is doing and worry about whether they themselves are in style. Miles has confidence in his own taste, and he goes his own way."

And jazz buffs are determind to follow. Folk-rock, hard-rock and country music may be what's happening, but Davis just quietly pursues his own course. His records sell steadily and well. He commands concert fees of $5,000 a night — consistently, year after year, while more ephemeral figures fade away.

●

Part of his dogged endurance is due to years of rugged training. He started playing in grade school in Alton, Ill., and when he was 13, his father, a dentist gave him a trumpet. By the time he was 16, he was good enough to catch on as third trumpet man in a band led by two of jazz's biggest stars, Dizzy Gillespie and Charlie Parker.

Eventually he moved to New York with them where he played with Parker, studied at the prestigious Juillard School of Music, kept learning and gradually began to develop a style — all his own but rooted in St. Louis. "In St. Louis we don't shake the notes, we bend them," he says. "That's why I have no vibrato. Vibrato is for white men."

In 1948, he formed his own group of nine men, whose number included the great Gerry Mulligan and whose records, now called "Birth of the Cool," are credited with starting a whole new jazz era.

●

He never looked back. Over the years, as he climbed to the top of the jazz polls, his groups spun off such marvelous musicians as the late John Coltrane and drummer Philly Joe Jones.

The legend of Davis has grown offstage as well as on, largely because his whole life style is based on a fierce — almost belligerent — independence. He lives a constant, improvised freak-out — in a huge New York house, in a $17,000 red Ferrari, in snakeskin pants and leather boots. He has been divorced three times.

If he has a consuming passion outside music, it is physical fitness. Every day he is in New York he drives up to a gym in the Bronx and undergoes a rigorous boxer's workout, supervised by his own trainer.

"It gets me away from musicians and helps me think," he says. "It cleans my chest up, builds up my wind and my concentration. And we play real quick so it's good for my co-ordination."

It's also good for his image of himself as quick and tough and black. The world of music is perhaps more integrated — and less self-consciously so — than any other, and Davis has no hatred for whites.

But he does harbor a loathing for police, based on one gratuitous beating he received in 1959 and on an unpleasant arrest this spring for, among other things, having improper registration of his car and carrying brass knuckles.

"It wouldn't have happened if I hadn't been a black man driving a red car," he says bitterly. "On the way to the station the cop keeps saying, 'I've got Miles Davis' like I was Jesse James."

●

But when he picks up his trumpet and starts playing, the rest of the world fades away. As he grows and changes, so does his sound.

"Hear that sound?" he says as he listens to a tape for a record that will be called "Zonked." "Isn't that a helluva sound? Sure, it's different. I'm different and that's my music. I was different in 1946, '47 and even '45. You've got to go with life."

Conservatory Concert Sunday

Interesting variety has been a feature of the current series of end-of-year concerts by students of the Victoria Conservatory of Music at McPherson Playhouse.

Even so, this Sunday's program is exceptional. For the first time the organ has been added to the array of instruments and in addition there will be vocal ensembles as well as solos.

Organists who will be heard in, respectively, a Trio Sonata by Bach, Humoresque for Flute Stop by Pietro Yon, a Bach Fugue and a Reverie by Harris, are Madeleine Groos, Carrie Humpherys and Elizabeth Courtnall.

* * *

Also Erik Lythgoe will play Boellmann's Menuet Gothique and Bach's Great Prelude in G.

A vocal ensemble accompanied by Richard Proudman will open the program and a junior vocal ensemble accompanied by Mrs. Bulman-Fleming will close it.

A trio consisting of Jacqueline Tarry, violin, Anne Valdal, cello and Allison Marshall, piano, will perform the first movement of Arensky's Trio in D Minor.

Another trio combines the alto voice of Barbara Ebell with violist Trefor Jones and pianist Frances Crampton in two Brahms songs.

Piano soloists taking part range from four-year-old Geoffrey Jay to seniors Diane Crowther, Janet Pennington and Frances Crampton and include Susan Geddes, Sydney Condrashoff and Carol Speller.

* * *

Violinist Jean McRae will be accompanied by Stephen Calder in a Schubert Waltz and cellist Anne Valdal playing the first movement of Hadyn's Concerto in C will be accompanied by Lawrence Brown.

Vocal soloists are Linda Scanlon singing an Irish folk song accompanied by Miss Crampton and Hillary Scott in an English song with Miss Humpherys.

Ian Franklin will accompany oboist Sandra Pumfey in movements from a Handel Concerto.

The concert will begin at 2:30 p.m.

Bastion Imports Eastern Talent

First two productions of Bastion Theatre's 1970-'71 season will be directed by a professional actor-director from Toronto.

Edwin Stephenson will also play one of the lead roles in the first show, the Neil Simon comedy The Star Spangled Girl, scheduled for September at McPherson Playhouse.

He has directed and played in this play previously at Port Carling, Ont., where he runs a summer stock season.

Stephenson will bring with him another Toronto actor, Bruce Gray, who will also be repeating his role from the Port Carling production of the comedy.

Bastion also hopes to bring Ontario director Colin Gorrie to Victoria to direct the Tennessee Williams play, Summer and Smoke, which will be seen in early February.

Gorrie is one of four young Canadian directors selected for the director-in-training-in-Britain program by the Ontario Department of Education.

While introducing new directors to Victoria, these arrangements will also free Bastion's artistic director, Peter Mannering, to adapt and direct the school touring program which starts Oct. 13.

The three-week summer theatre school opens July 20. Instructors are Karen Austin and Stuart Baker. Application forms may be obtained by phoning Bastion Theatre, 382-4112, or calling at the office, 30 Bastion Square.

Hazard Drops

Cooler weather and showers helped ease the forest fire situation in British Columbia last week. Although there were 160 new outbreaks, the B.C. Forest Service says only 123 are still burning, including a 5,000-acre blaze in the remote Ingenika River Valley northwest of Williston Lake. The Kamloops district reported 81 new fires and the hazard is moderate.

Dickens: 100 Years Later

Revealing Glimpse Of Writer at Work

By ANTHONY JENKINS

On June 9th, one hundred years ago, Charles Dickens died at Gad's Hill, and his death left his contemporaries with a peculiar sense of loss.

It was not simply that readers of the interrupted Edwin Drood were never to know how the book's "mystery" would turn out; there was a general feeling that a rich store of eccentric characters might still have come from the imagination of the 58-year-old writer.

It is this richness, coupled with a sense of continuing growth, experiment and novelty, that Angus Wilson recaptures in this handsomely produced centennial biography.

In calling his book "The World of Charles Dickens", Mr. Wilson has set out to explain why Dickens' mind developed along the lines that it did. He considers each of the novels as the outcome of pressures that were both social and personal, so that Dickens is seen throughout as an observer of the world around him and as an uneasy member of his large, and somewhat hopeless, family. In short, the book gives one an extraordinary look at the whole process of writer at work.

THE WORLD OF CHARLES DICKENS, by Angus Wilson. Collins. $15.95.

Angus Wilson is, of course, an important novelist himself and knows what it is to write, invent and plan. I can think of no other writer who is better matched to the temperament of his subject. Like Dickens, Wilson comes from a middle-class home of desperate, but fading, gentility, and nobody has outlined the tensions between the young Dickens and his unsatisfactory parents with such deep understanding.

Two important things emerge from that childhood. First was the fact that Dickens felt betrayed by his mother when she tried to get him re-instated at Warren's blacking factory after his father had rescued him from it. From Mrs. Dickens' point of view it was a matter of practical economics above family pride; but for young Charles it was a callous act of treachery.

Critics have seen all this before, but Angus Wilson goes further. Here, he thinks, lies the root of Dickens' failure to understand women in real life and to portray them with any depth in his fiction. The blacking-factory episode left him with a deep suspicion of the sort of woman who tries to make household decisions. His ideal became the beautiful help-mate who stands lovingly and admiringly behind her husband.

In real life, his sister-in-law Georgina Hogarth seems to have consciously fashioned herself to that ideal, rather than Dickens modelling the ideal to her example as has generally been supposed.

In fiction, there is the long line of adoring little housekeepers from David Copperfield's Agnes to Little Dorrit. His attitude to women is beautifully summed up by the following verdict: Dickens could never give his heroines the benefit of his irony and ridicule.

The second imporant thing is that the melodramatics of so many of the characters, now frowned upon by modern critics as unreal theatrics, might only be a slight exaggeration of the actual state of affairs in the Dickens' histrionic household.

As young Charles was moved from house to house down the social scale, as absconding grandfathers or grandmothers who had been houskeepers had to be discreetly lied about and dramatised into respectability for the eyes of the neighbors, there must have been a great deal of "theatrical" atitudinising and exaggerated weeping and wailing.

When he comes to the actual novels, Mr. Wilson is judicious and penetrating. Oliver Twist is a "pop-novel", hence its appeal in the 1960s. Barnaby Rudge represents Dickens' swing away from the Byronic romanticising of revolution and chaos. David Copperfield fails because as a study of a writer's growth from childhood up to fame and fortune it says peculiarly little about how the creative mind grows and can only recommend "hard work" as the key to success.

The masterpieces are Bleak House, Little Dorrit and Our Mutual Friend, books that have found favor with academics because of their use of symbols, but which Wilson chooses from his own individual viewpoint. In my opinion, this leaves him with a surprising blind spot about the success of early novels like Nicholas Nickleby.

The illustrations in this study are both plentiful and beautiful, they are also an intrinsic part of what is being said, for the pictures frequently stand sideways — on to the text. In place of countless portraits of the "inimitable Boz" or reproductions from Phiz, Cruickshank or Leech, the majority of the illustrations present a portfolio of the Victorian Background.

For instance, in the section that deals with Dickens' first journey to America we have a set of contemporary landscapes from Broadway to the Mississippi. In the section on Dickens' supposed mistress, Ellen Ternan, there is a delicious mid-century Valentine and Holman Hunt's "The Awakened Conscience." In fact, the book is a treasury of Victorian genre painings, the equivalent on canvas of the Victorian novel.

Angus Wilson has admitted to being influenced by Dickens in his writing, and he understands the demands that Dickens' relationship with his public made on him. Perhaps he plays down Dickens' political and social activities in mid-centrury, but to compensate we are given a telling account of why Dickens had frequently to live away from England in order to write about it whereas other biographies tell us what happened to Dickens in Genoa or Lucerne, this one explains why he went and what he got out of it as a writer.

While he admires Dickens, Wilson does not worship him. His views are full of good sense; his instincts as a fellow-writer frequently light up an odd corner of Dickens' mind, and his prose is a model of clarity. But above all, Angus Wilson has lived with Dickens' novels for years and his views about them have been formed slowly over that period. In consequence, his book is not simply a memorial; it is also a labor of love.

'His World Unreal, His Plots Absurd'

By KEITH DEWHURST

LONDON — There seems to be an atmosphere of guarded uncertainty about the Charles Dickens centenary celebrations, as though everyone had the nagging feeling that Dickens' status as a national institution should be exhaustively reviewed, but not yet; not in 1970: it should be reviewed later, perhaps in another ten or 20 years.

The implication is that neither the common nor the professional reader has so confident an opinion of him as before. This is certainly my own feeling.

I am not sure what to make of Dickens or what my response to him means. When I read a chapter of one of his novels I think that he was the most naturally gifted writer who ever lived, and in the most crucial aspect of writing, Dickens had a supremely fertile gift of words. His ability to recreate in words what he had seen and felt is breath-taking.

Yet here is the paradox. After reading Dickens for an hour or two I find that I cannot continue because I simply don't believe in it.

His world is so unreal, his plot so absurd, his outlook is so uninformed and naive that I am not sure what he has to say.

I recently reread, for example, Engels' description of the industrial revolution in Manchester in "The Condition of the Working Class in 1844." It seems to me to be far superior to any comparable description in Dickens for the simple reason that it does not stop at the emotional and the picturesque.

What is fascinating about Dickens is that he did every bit as much on-the-spot research as Engels and then processed all his data through a fantastic and grotesque imagination. The question that he poses is whether imaginative truth is enough, and, indeed, what is the nature of imaginative truth.

This was asked during his own lifetime by the Russian and French novelists and, indeed, in England by George Eliot. These writers all tried to make their imaginative creation like real people in a real social background.

▣

Dickens used the stock popular plot. He was not an intellectual in the sense that virtually all the great novelists who followed him have been intellectual.

Dickens was like his readers in that he did not try to impose much order on his material except that of his own instinctive "good" feelings. He had a generously open heart and his Oliver Twist is still a popular symbol when the Chartist orators have been forgotten.

Dickens was the last truly great writer who was also widely popular. If we look at the television programs which are the equivalent of Dickens's monthly magazine episodes we see that their literary qualities are simply not of the same order as those of Dickens, and we may even suspect that if they were the programs would not be popular.

Dickens is the expression in literature of that maelstrom of energy and change that we call the industrial revolution. He is as little in control of his talent and feelings as England was of the enormous sources that it had released.

Dickens is feverish and shaken. The national taste for the dramatic setpiece and the comical picaresque adventure is taken in his work to its most distorted extreme.

The effect upon his original readers seems to have been, through the atmosphere of the novels, a confirmation of their own tumultuous experience, and also, through the simple human values and the conventional happy endings, a deep reassurance.

To later Victorian readers and to most readers until the essays of Edmund Wilson and David Cecil 30 years ago, Dickens was the prophet of social justice and the humorous celebrator of the English character. Wilson and Cecil placed him as a Victorian writer with a judgment to which little had been added: what is different since their day is our own view of our art and situation, and the spread of the mass market.

▣

To Dickens the popular audience was his life blood. To us it poses a grave problem of standards.

We have no fixed conventions and no tacit agreement as to the function of the storyteller in our society.

In this sort of confusion the classics of national literature should offer both inspiration and points of reference but Dickens for all his eminence does not.

He seems too eccentric and individual to refer to anything beyond his own genius and a few decades of the nineteenth century.

Dickens offers, of course, the classic English recipe of individual character and a concentration on the domestic, but in today's conditions it is not really the subject matter that is at issue.

What is at issue is the way in which the subject matter should be handled and the depth and seriousness with which it should be analysed.

On these particular problems Dickens has little to offer because although the popular audience of the 1840s was sentimental it could not deny that its very soul had been shaken.

Our popular fiction reading public does try to deny this and in consequence it is afraid of the power to move of highbrow art — with deep and unfortunate loss to both.

Tender Tale of Horror

By BEATRICE CARROLL

The scene of this moving novel is the city of Krakow in Poland. The time is the beginning of World War II. The characters are a small, close group of Jewish people living, or perhaps existing is a better word, on Jacob Street, and playing their part in the enormous tragedy of the Jews under Hitler's Third Reich.

THE BADERS OF JACOB STREET, by Henia Karmel-Wolfe. McClelland and Stewart. $7.95.

There are no blatant horrors in ths story, no mention of tortures or gas chambers; it is far more subtly and tensely told. The Nazi oppressors are nameless and faceless, almost without identity.

The ashes of Rabbi Kluger are sent back to Jacob Street in a sealed box — "so small a box to contain a man" — and there is a mention of the little Jewish town of Oswiecim, renamed Auschwitz by the conquerors; Simon Hollander, who has been caught dealing in illegal currency is found shot — but there is not much else in the way of obvious cruelty.

The greater and more gripping drama is in the daily lives of the Bader family, Samuel and Amelia and their daughter, Halina, once a family of "princely stature", of wealth and aristocracy: of Isaac Cohn, the pious leader of the illegal religious observances, and his childless wife, Bertha, who mothers every one; of Max Becker, the Luftmensch, "the fix-it-all," and his beautiful blonde daughter, Eva, who can pass for Aryan: of Sarah and David Blum, and of Stefan Weiss, Halina's lover, who is playing a dangerous game.

The horror is the whittling away of freedom of thought and movement, the gradually accelerated deprivation of liberty and the systematic destruction of the basis of their lives.

Edicts are issued. Armbands bearing the Star of David are ordered to be worn. Access to certain streets is forbidden. No more can Jewish people walk in the Main Square, with its beautiful golden-crowned cathedral and springtime lilacs, in the parks or on the avenues.

Finally the Baders and their neighbors are forced in to the ghetto, walled in, impenetrable. "They will bury us alive there," someone says.

As history has recorded, they were buried alive there, and worse. But throughout this brave and tender tale, there shines the dignity of the human spirit, the courage and will to survive, and the power of love.

It may well be that much of this absorbing novel is autobiographical. Polish-born Henia Karmel-Wolfe and her family moved from ghetto to ghetto, hoping to avoid being sent to a concentration camp. But she was sent to Buchenwald-Leipzig, where she began to write. It was her way, she says, to escape reality.

Her Heart On Sleeve

In Victoria there is more time to pause, to reflect and remember, or so it would seem. Perhaps it's just that more natural beauty exists here which moves a few sensitive persons to comment on the human landscape.

Shelagh Hall may be such a person. Her poetry is about the simple things, the deep-felt emotions many of us can't came to grips with, or at least too many of us fail to articulate. And if her first volume is thin, it is rich in emotion.

PICTURES IN WORDS, by Shelagh Hall. 75 cents.

We live in an electric era where any distortion of light, sound and language sometimes passes for art or the "new wave". Mrs. Hall is comfortably at home with her heart upon her sleeve. And that is where a poet must wear it if she wants to communicate feelings.

Her haunting lyric in "The Truth" is neither old nor new but a statement that all mankind has felt.

I saw them then,
Yet, could not bear to see.
And, looked away seeing nothing and everything.
Dazed, feeling neither the rain nor the sun,
Blindly, I fled.

In an age when the triteness of television blots out all but the most maudlin emotions, it is good to know that people like Mrs. Hall are writing and thinking. — G. O.

Canadian Masterpiece Of Song, Poem, Art

By JUDI FREEMAN

There is something safely nationalistic about buying the most recent Canadian books of photographs, poems or songs and putting them on the living room coffee table for all to see.

The spine of the book may never be cracked but visitors will notice, perhaps with admiration, that their hosts are first cultured, and second, Canadian.

Song To A Seagull is a Canadian book which does not belong on a coffee table.

Its rightful place is close to the piano, tucked into an often-used music case, and packed with the camping gear.

There have been many Canadian collections of songs but this effort of a North York music teacher is a masterpiece of song, poem and art.

SONG TO A SEAGULL, by Robert Evans. Ryerson. $6.95.

"This book is intended for the reader who believes that boxes are for soap and that the sensibilities of the human spirit should not be fenced in by artificial division of experience."

With these words, Robert Evans steps straight into a collection of songs and poems with a melodic background of illustrations.

Each poem and song is a part of Canadian culture. The Red River Valley and Squid-Jiggin' Ground have historical significance; Joni Mitchell's The Circle Game and folklore's Blooming Bright Star of Belle Isle are poetically lyrical of their time.

"The poetry should be read aloud since the sound is a part of the meaning and both are to be savored; the songs should be sung with an awareness of the particular environment which gave them birth," states Evans in his preface.

Leonard Cohen, E. J. Pratt, Raymond Souster — their poems speak of a large and lonely country.

Ian Tyson, Gordon Lightfoot, Joni Mitchell — their songs sing of wistful times.

But the songs of folklore are the meat of the book. There is a vastness to Canadian songs which takes in the Prairies, the Quebec countryside, and the Maritime waters. And it feels like each and every folk-song is intent on skipping, running and jumping across the nation.

Evans points out that a guitar is the natural accompaniment for the folk music but other harmonic instruments can be used. Easy scores are provided.

However, instrumental adeptness is not required. A joyful singing of Vive le Canadienne or This Land Is Your Land will bring out a shoe-tapping, hand-clapping response.

If you want to organize something, try supplying some spoons, an inverted pot for finger-taps, or two pieces of paper for rubbing together.

In notes at the back of the book, Evans supplies the derivations of the songs from folklore and short biographies of contributors.

The illustrator, Peggy Steele of Ottawa, makes an attempt to mirror the spirit of song and poem with woodcuts in mauve and black. Her successes are the 'birds in flight.'

Not as successful are the scenic cuts, too full of detail to lift the spirit. The reader must pause to examine them, and, in doing so, can stumble ever so slightly.

The overall tone, however, of woodcuts, historic songs and modern poetry "married" to the theme of Canada, make this book a useful and significant collection.

Pike Makes News Even From 'Other Side'

By HILARY BUTLER

Was Bishop James Pike murdered?

This is the question to which Hans Holzer addresses himself in "The Psychic World of Bishop Pike."

Author of 15 books on various aspects of parapsychology, Holzer's latest will no doubt sell like hot cakes. He is cashing in on two very good money-spinners — the charismatic clown of the episcopal circus and the flesh-tingling enigma of spiritualism.

Like all great clowns "Jim" Pike was more sinned against than sinning. The Anglican episcopate needed an anti-panjandrum to open up some ecclesiastical cans of worms. Bishop Barnes of Birmingham showed the way between the wars, but was altogether too solemn, being a mathematician Bishop Robinson of "Honest to God" fame caught the public eye but never quite acquired the clown's charisma. The late Bishop Pike had everything needed to go over big.

THE PSYCHIC WORLD OF BISHOP PIKE, by Hans Holzer. General Publishing. $7.50.

Trained to the law, he was open to any sort of evidence. As a renegade Catholic his mind was religiously "cpen." His extraordinary personal courage invested him with a sort of glamor and newsworthiness. Indeed, fellow bishops found his penchant for the limelight irritating.

"If they were together in the same room" a bishop was once reported to have complained, "Jim could upstage Jesus Himself." To which Pike's friend, William Stringfellow, responded, rather neatly, "But Jesus wouldn't care."

BISHOP JAMES PIKE

And now, it appears, even death is not to be "the end of woes." The spirit of the bishop is summoned from the other side and cross-examined about "his dramatic and unexplained disappearance" (as Holzer will have it), and the cause of his death in the Jordanian desert becomes a subject of psychic investigation. Helped out with astrology!

Those who relish the science of the paranormal will gobble up this book, which its journalist author has made easy enough to read. Pike's own book, "The Other Side," aligned him irrevocably with the parapsychologists; but one must ask whether he would have favoured Holzer's compulsive efforts to rebut the official statement that his death was an accident.

"The Bishop himself," says Holzer, "apparently has gone on to more important things than worrying about those who have done him wrong on earth."

So why bring all this up at all? Presumably because in the chapter "Bishop Pike Speaks to Me" the author hears the medium relay from Pike: "I have not given up the fight. Nothing has silenced me, not even the grave."

Isn't there a contradiction here? Either he has gone on to more important things or he has not. And then, is this rhetorical voice we hear through "Albert" (the medium's instrument) authentic James Pike? Why should an outspoken man like Pike fiddle around with spooky imputations about "two men" and "possibly a woman" who may have engineered his "accidental" death.

"Is your death an accident," asks the author through the medium, "or is it murder?"

"A little of both, shall we say?" Pike responds.

And again, referring to Pike's fatal fall from the cliff, officially an accident, the author asks, "Who were the people that pushed you?"

"No one in particular, but sent by them."

"What nationality were they?"

"Arabic" (sic), and "they deemed that it was impossible that this should come to light." Strange how spooks use the lingo of melodrama.

Later Pike is heard referring to "my passing — my murder."

In effect this mediumistic interview with the deceased Bishop is very weird, elusive stuff. Like the Delphic oracles it is capable of a variety of interpretations, one of which is, one fears, that it is all utter bunk.

However, in the event of its causing evidence to be discovered of a sort that would lead a court of law to conclude that Pike's death was not accidental, then there would indeed be a feather in the cap of spiritualism.

But meanwhile, those of us who are insensitive to ESP, who find the lingo talked by ghosts to reek of the bogus, and who respect Pike for his theological courage rather than for his "psychic world" will reserve judgment.

One just hopes that this attempt to represent the Bishop as a partially holy ghost will not be allowed to damage the liberating work he accomplished this side of the grave.

'Duchess' to Open Fair

The lush renaissance panorama of Webster's great tragedy, The Duchess of Malfi, will sound the opening gong for the theatre portion of Victoria Fair 70 on July 16.

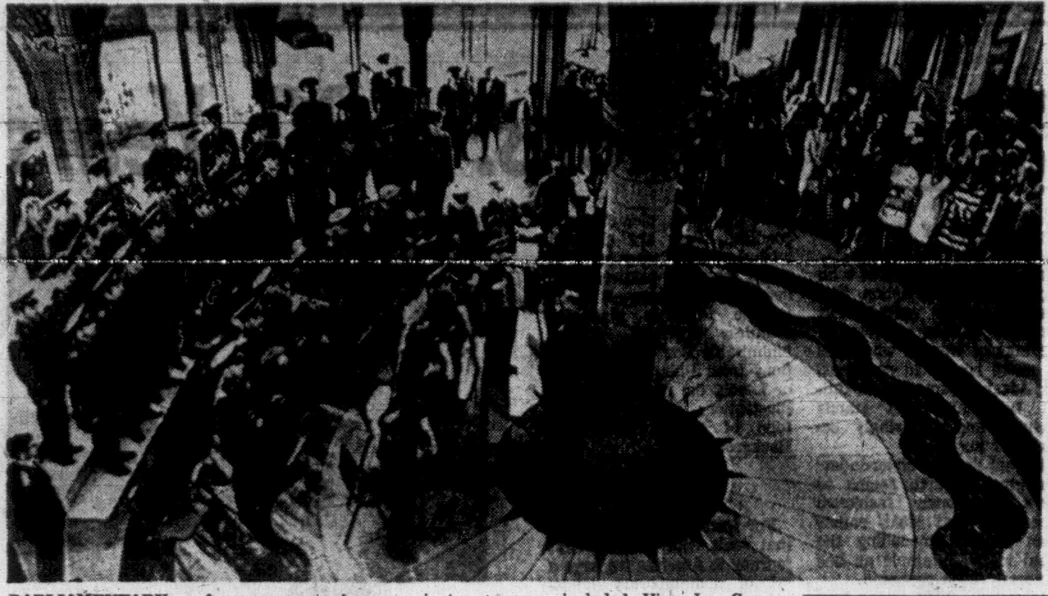
Rehearsals for Duchess and Androcles are now well launched under director Ralph Allen.

Final casting for The Duchess of Malfi has Vancouver actor Eric Schneider playing Ferdinand, Richard Gallupi the Cardinal, Anthony Jenkins, Antonio, John Krich, Bosola, [illegible], [illegible], the Duchess, Harriet Allen, Julia and Jim Berry, Delio.

The rest of the large cast includes student apprentices and local actors as follows:

Bill Murdoch, Colin Skinner, Ray Hunt, Julian Forrester, Barbara Meiklejohn, Michael Meiklejohn, Harvey Miller, Brian Brown, Daniel Frazza, Maria Wozniak, Neil Solomon, Roger Leaming, Blake Carter, David Andrist, Mary Ogg, Linda Massam, Kim McCaw, Mark McCarthy, Graham McPherson, Ev Robertson, Neil Rahn, David Burke, Christine Chester, Chris Butterfield and Bill Comerford.



PARLIAMENTARY performance was given by the Red Army Chorus in the centre block rotunda of the Parliament Buildings at Ottawa recently in the course of the ensemble's current Canadian tour. The 40-minute program included Vive La Canadienne and O Canada. The Red Army Chorus, dancers and instrumentalists come to Victoria June 30 to give a full-length concert in Memorial Arena.

Money for Arts Money Well Spent

Sounding Board

... By Audrey Johnson

"I think I'd better think it out again," sings Ron Moody as Fagin in a memorable moment from the musical, Oliver!

Everybody chuckles with delight. But it isn't all funny. It has its serious nub of wisdon that warrants the attention of everyone.

There come many moments in life when to think it out again — an idea, a preconception, an attitude, a habit either of mind or action — would be smart and profitable.

It wouldn't matter so much if the mental ruts, the outmoded and erroneous thinking relected purely on personal matters.

Hang-Ups

But individuals form groups and communities. They take on responsibilities of government, they become influences. And then it matters a great deal how they handle their hang-ups and disseminate their insufficiently researched ideas.

The situation of the arts in Canadian life and education is a case in point.

Hundreds of people on councils and school boards and in government departments across the country are living with ideas that may have had some credence when our great-grandparents were pioneering Canada.

Today they need thinking out again because 20th century knowledge makes these ideas concerning the arts not merely antediluvian but totally absurd.

Civic government officials who oppose "wasting the taxpayer's money on frills"; school officials who feel the arts must always be first to be sidelined whenever economy is stressed, these are people who are out of touch with the reality of the present.

Not only intelligent educators and psychologists, but the averagely perceptive ordinary person recognizes not a new, but an old truth — a truth as ancient as man himself.

The fact that the arts are inextricably involved with man's development, from early cave drawings, primitive tribal rhythms and dances and dramatized religious processionals is power witness to the human need for an outlet, a medium of self-expression beyond the routines of survival.

In this centruy's highly mechanized, super-materialistic stage of our development, many people including those in more or less dictatorial places, have blindly followed another false premise.

Money-Making

The only justification for the arts in education, you gather from perusing certain curriculum guides, is their potential in preparing the student for a money-making career.

In fact the function of the arts goes far deeper. Its primary concern is the growth, refreshment and healing of the human spirit.

Only a tiny percentage of any graduating class will possibly make a lucrative career out of the arts.

But a major percentage of the class from any progressive, inteligently administered school, will benefit throughout their lives from exposure to, or actual participation in, any of the fine arts.

Obviously one cannot walk with head in cloulds, loftily ignoring all financial implications. But it is what practical benefit comes to the community through the arts that is important.

The benefits that have accrued to a number of Canadian and American communities through fine arts festivals have been discussed here recently.

But if that is an old story, here is a new one — or at least another viewpoint.

The Royal Winnipeg Ballet has come up with a brief entitled "Introducing an export industry of considerable economic significance to Manitoba."

Within it ample evidence is brought to establish the fact that aside from being "great entertainment at home and irreplaceable advertising abroad," the RWB during the current year, will have spent $542,000, or 78 per cent of its revenue, inside Manitoba.

And that it is rapidly developing a subscriber business that is bringing people to Winnipeg on an average of four times a year from outside points including bordering States, with a consequent economic advantage to the city.

Long-Range

Unfortunately no one in Victoria has been clear-eyed enough to see the long-range rewards in this type of industry — at least not to the tune of anything approaching worthwhile capitalization, although the product has been offered. In fact it is there now. But it won't wait forever.

The trouble is not that adequate capitilization could not be found for a summer arts fiesta or the establishment of a first class professional performaning group.

The trouble is in a rooted belief that climate and scenery are enough; that phoney Tudor buildings and tea and crumpets are enough, that seasonal prosperity based on gimmicky tourist lures is the ultimate.

Victoria is a city of potentially great artistic stature, not only on the national but the international scene.

But too many Victorians, among them those with some influence, continue to regard this city as forever condemned to accept a position of artistic mediocrity based on geographic position among other easily disputable points.

And that certainly needs thinking out again.

A Big Voice, Gentle Humor

By ROBIN DENSELON

LONDON — She is smaller, more delicate, more beautiful than one would expect from listening to her powerful singing, gentler and funnier than one would expect from listening to her husband Stokely Carmichael.

Now 39, Miriam Makeba is a grandmother and the most successful artist to have emerged from Africa in the independence decade. She lives in Guinea, "a very normal life," working in the local maternity clinic and social center. But on African tours she and Carmichael are treated like visiting heads of state.

Recently, she gave her first appearance here for three years. At a reception she sat surrounded by a court circle of African girl friends in the sort of environment she would probably like to destroy: A record company full of pluggers and journalists drinking gin and lime, and where the official handout talked of her early years in "bustling Johannesburg," her performance in "King Kong," at Kennedy's Madison Square Garden birthday party in 1962, without on mention of black power or apartheid.

She has an answer to everything, quiet burning confidence and a soft husky voice. Her marriage seems almost too ideologically correct to be possible: an ex-Black Panther concerned with promoting black power and identity, and the top singer from the African roots with which he is so obsessed.

■

Carmichael — who is banned from Britain — has obviously had his effect. "He is the most brilliant young man I know, and his is the most honest, because everything he says is the truth."

I referred to him as a "Black American," and Makeba protested. "He's not — he's an African. There is no such thing as an American. There are Europeans living in America and Africans who were brought to America by Europeans. The country belongs to the red man."

In Guinea, Carmichael works with former Ghanaian president Kwame Nkrumah, overthrown by the army four years ago, for his return to Accra at the start of a campaign for African unity.

I suggested that Carmichael's place was helping the struggle in America. "Africans who live everywhere should fight everywhere. The struggle is no different in South Africa, the streets of Chicago, Trinidad, or Canada. The black people are the victims of capitalism, racism, and oppression. Period."

She grins from beneath an amazing peaked hat, and explains ideals of black unity that in the present phase of African nationalism at least, seem to be sadly far-fetched. For a start, the American "back to Africa" movement.

"If they want to go, then they should go," said Makeba, although many Africans are openly frightened at the thought of educated black Americans descending on the continent and taking the key jobs. She shrugged. "That's their problem. Africa belongs to them as much as to us who remained there."

Mr. and Mrs. Stokely Carmichael

Then there is Nkrumah. What about the economic chaos in Ghana when he fell? She frowned. "Doesn't Britain have economic problems — and it's such an old, old nation, and it once colonized the whole world."

I said I hadn't found much support for him in the country. "You are a westerner. That is to be expected." What of the last elections, and the swing to the centre? "We don't even have to talk of them, of course they were rigged — like everywhere else in the west," Sh grins again. There seems little point in launching into a defence.

Musically, Makeba concentrates on traditional African song, but her next album will include contemporary material such as the Beatles' "In My Life." She plans to cut down on touring and spend longer in Guinea, but firmly denied reports that she will give up singing.

When I left her she complained "I'm getting old." Three hours later, on "Late Night Line-up" she sang one rock ballad. The backing group were mediocre, the credits were rolled across the middle of the song, but the singing was electrifying.

Stanley Still Going Strong

TORONTO — Stanley Holloway, whose riotous monologues made him a household word in Britain half a century ago, is sill in show business.

In fact the 80-year-old actor, who in the 1950s also made the world sit up and sing along with the Cockney dustman in My Fair Lady, will be among performers in this year's Shaw Festival at Niagara-on-the-Lake, Ont.

He will play the role of Burgess, the crusty old Cockney father of Candida, in the play Candida which opens June 22.

Mr. Holloway, who appeared hale and hearty on his arrival here for rehearsals, looks on the performance as somewhat of a semi-retirement.

"I thought rather than just sit at home and rusticate I would come and do this—get back into the theatre after 12 years," he said.

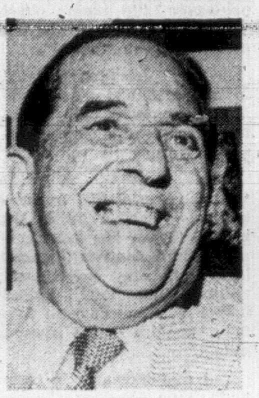
"It's the only way I've ever known to make a living—though business-wise it's not the kind of paying proposition I'm used to."

He now lives in a cottage near Brighton with his second wife.

"I have no hobbies. My hobby has always been my work. And I find the older I get the happier I am in the company of music and musical people and people connected with the entertainment business, and the stranger I become in civilian company.

"It's this game—it keeps you young if you keep going. You're living in a world of make-believe. You must keep your brain working—and your pocket too."

It was a Shaw play of course that once before brought him out of retirement to the world's attention—in the musical version of Pygmalion, better known as My Fair Lady.



HOLLOWAY

He was the first person cast in the show and the longest to last—through four years of Broadway, London's West End and on tour, plus the film version.

"I got sick of having to do it. Sick of having to go to the same theatre, put on the same clothes, say the same lines. But at the time it was indeed a kind of rebirth for me."

Directing this year's Shaw Festival is New York actor Harris Yulin, and his appointment raised a few eyebrows.

The 32-year-old Mr. Yulin was relatively unknown, has played Shaw only once in a short seven-year acting career off Broadway and in United States theatres, and has tried directing only twice before.

But he is optimistic about the undertaking.

"I can honestly say I wasn't nervous. But the first day was very hard—getting to know six people, six different characters. I was completely whacked out at the end of it."

Mr. Yulin came to the festival after Shaw Festival director Paxton Whitehead saw him direct Terrence McNally's Cuba Si.

How does Mr. Holloway feel about having a younger man directing?

"You know he doesn't try to impinge himself on you. He listens to what you are saying and looks at what you're doing and then comes up with something that might improve on it. Seems very wise."

Haunted Figures Mirror Existence

Looking at Art

. . . With Gordon Rice

Richard Ciccimarra's retrospective exhibit (Print Gallery, through June 27) begins with some watercolors done 20 years ago, some faces and figures of West Indian peoples.

They are drawn and painted with the same deft and delicate sensitivity as his later figures, yet seem far less troubled. These people too are silent, but their expressions and postures indicate a basic trust or faith in the nature of day-to-day existence which the North Americans now lack.

As a counterweight these early pictures oppose the artist's later works, which comprise the bulk of this exhibit.

* * *

The later pictures show us anonymous, nearly impersonal figures, often with downcast heads and shadowy faces, or white, blanked-out faces. They are drawn in conte or soft charcoal, and brushed with soft washes of gray, or gray-green color. A deep, blackish blue surrounds the figures in some of his large, new collages. In other collages masses of ghostly white figures pasted on dark wood drift by like live mummies, coming from nowhere, going nowhere.

If we do not deeply trust ourselves, or our daily existence, certainly we will not trust others. We become isolated, desperate, lost. Is this basically our condition now, as the artist seems undeniably to say in his later work? One can ignore, but not easily deny, that the cancer of doubt and fear gnaws away at our deepest insides.

Certainly we would wish to believe it otherwise, and that our distrust and our disasters are only temporary. Occasionally we look to the artists to show us something else.

* * *

No reassurance comes from these faceless, featureless figures. They pass along in a long nightmare of weariness and loss, haunted by cold fear and meaningless death.

Ciccimarra's work reveals intelligence, sensitivity, and long and careful study. Certain artists, Matisse, or the Canadian Morrice, show us these same qualities combined with a serenity and joy we cannot doubt, cannot find false or illusory. Even the contemporary Canadian painters Alex Colville or Tony Onley show us an austere serenity which must be the result of profound reflection.

For Alex Colville (whose work we see too little of) there seem to be crystalline moments where the daily madness and dullness suddenly pass away, and a deeper vision of existence comes upon him. These are the moments he seeks to communicate.

* * *

The joy Matisse expresses is perhaps quite rare, mysterious, fascinating as a distant light. Colville relates to us his moment of peace in pictures which are also compelling.

I mention these artists because like Ciccimarra they are honest and intelligent observers of man's situation. One might also mention Picasso, or locally, Max Bates, who to find their pleasure and save their sanity lash out at hypocrisy and phoniness and cruelty, at the greed and smugness which is presently suffocating the world.

Ciccimarra, it would seem, has become such a sensitive observer of man's inner isolation and suffering that we might feel him trapped in despair, that is is all he sees.

* * *

I should add that this is what one feels via the pictures here, and the pictures may not necessarily reflect an artist's essential character. In other words, optimists have been know to produce pessimistic pictures, and vice versa.

Monet, for instance, revealed much doubt, and despair, in both his statements and his actions yet his pictures do seem so honest, we can infer that Monet's painting was a way for him into another world, a world which really exists alongside our dull, sad, frightening one, which is also no doubt real.

It is this latter reality which Ciccimarra has distilled sofinely, which seems to haunt and obsess him. If one has the ability to share with him his particular concern for inner suffering he will find that the pictures, while each sharing the same basic theme, have an intrinsic interest, varying as one cloud does from another.

PRIVATE HOMES AND BUSINESSES

Bell Applies to Raise Phone Rates

OTTAWA (CP) — Bell Canada applied to the government Friday for an increase in basic rates charged for its telephone services in Ontario, Quebec, Labrador and parts of the Northwest Territories.

The application filed with the Canadian transport commission asks for increases in the basic monthly rates to local telephone services for both private homes and businesses.

The company said the increase sought would amount to about 6 per cent—advances of between 20 cents and 40 cents a month on basic monthly subscription charges for individual residence telephones and between 35c and $1.15 on the rates for business phones.

The Montreal-based communications company, whose customer rates are subject to federal regulation, also seeks increases in permissible charges for other residential and business services and equipment—extension cords, deocrative telephones and other facilities.

Based on 1970 figures, the increased rates would add $30,000,000 to Bell's estimated total annual revenue of $1,000,000,000.

APPROVED INCREASE

The transport commission approved an increase in Bell's long-distance charges and some other service rates in a ruling last September that added $27,500,000 to the company's total revenue.

The board's hearing of the new application is scheduled to start Sept. 9.

Bell said in an announcement that the new subscription-rate application, the first since monthly rates were increased Dec. 1, 1958, is necessary "to help offset rising costs and prevent deterioration in service."

In the application initiated in late 1968 and ruled upon last September, Bell sought an increase in monthly subscription rates, as well as the higher long-distance charges.

Total value of that application was placed at $83,600,000 in 1969 terms, but the transport commission ruled against higher monthly rates and reduced the total annual increase in revenue to less than one-third of the amount sought.

Bell said increases in costs that have become known since September would add more than $45,000,000 annually in 1970 terms to its operating expenses.

AFFECTS DIRECT OPERATION

The new application applies only to direct Bell Canada telephone operations in Ontario, Quebec, the Labrador, part of Newfoundland and the Northwest Territoies. In these areas Bell has almost 6,000,000 telephones and handles an average of more than 34,000,000 calls a day.

The application does not apply to Bell subsidiaries in the Atlantic provinces — Maritime Telephone and Telegraph, New Brunswick Telephone, Avalon Telephone in Newfoundland — or Northern Telephone in parts of Northern Ontario. They are subject to regulation by provincial authorities.

The telephone systems in the four western provinces also come under provincial jurisdiction. The three in the Prairie provinces are provincially owned.

"Bell Canada recognizes the need for restraint in the present inflationary period but, while doing so, cannot ignore the continuing high level of demand for telephone service, nor the social and economic consequences of a deterioration in service," the application says.

Bell has been assisting the federal prices and incomes commission in its anti-inflation campaign by handling and mailing to subscribers the commission's pamphlets urging Canadians to exercise restraint in pay demands and in charges for goods and services.

Bell said it has been forced to drop or shelve plans for construction and modernization this year and next because the company decided it would be unable to borrow sufficient money on currently-depressed bond and stock markets.

Unless it gets the funds to maintain programs of modernization, Bell would "fall behind in technological development," the company said.

'Public Should Know Where Taxes Go'

VANCOUVER (CP) — Canadian taxpayers should be given more information on how their money is being spent, the head of the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants said today.

J. E. Maheu of Montreal told the annual meeting of the Institute of Chartered Accountants of British Columbia, that "in spite of all the information published by the government of Canada, a taxpayer really has very little idea how his tax dollars are being spent."

He said this should be done by giving the Auditor General — the public "watchdog" on spending — more independence and greater leeway to probe and report on federal financial affairs.

The government has laid down increasing requirements for disclosure of financial information of companies and the accounting profession has been instrumental in setting standards which give shareholders and the public the information they require, he said.

"I think it's now time that the government had a hard look at its method of reporting and see if it can't come up with more meaningful information for the public of Canada, so they will know where their tax dollars are being spent."

Canada 'Has Skills, But Lacks Techniques'

MONTREAL (CP) — R. J. Balfour of Vancouver told the Association of Consulting Engineers of Canada Thursday that while Canada has technological skills equal to those anywhere in the world, it still lags in design-management techniques.

"There is a gap in the development of design-management techniques, as compared with both Europe and the U.S.—a gap of about 10 to 15 years," Mr. Balfour, president of T. Ingledow and Associates Ltd., told the association's annual meeting.

"Both in Europe and the U.S., consultant-builders have developed multi-national companies, staffed with men trained to transfer on permanent or semi-permanent basis for project or area offices anywhere in the world."

BUSINESS and FINANCE

Editor: G. S. Kent

Can. Bonanza

Canadian Bonanza Petroleums Ltd. had earnings of $21,648 in the first three months of 1970 compared with a loss of $70,138 in the first quarter of 1969.

The Calgary-based firm said the 1969 loss did not include the accounts of its substantially-owned subsidiary, Frisco Petroleums Ltd.

Gross revenue in 1970 was $315,808 compared with $6,805 in 1969.

Canadian Bonanza said exploration activity will continue north of La. Ronge, Sask., where the company found concentrations of nickel and copper in 1969.

Silver-Lee

Silver-Lee Mines Ltd. has acquired Bear Tools Co. Ltd., an Alberta-based oil field fishing tool and equipment rental company.

Bear Tools has offices in Edmonton, Calgary, Rocky Mountain House, Fort St. John, and Fort Nelson.

The acquisition is subject to the approval of Vancouver Stock Exchange, on which Silver-Lee is listed.

Mill City

Mill City Petroleums Ltd. reports a net loss of $29,439 for 1969, compared with a profit of $136,687 in 1968.

Cash earnings from operations were $168,384 compared with $135,820.

Mill City is a member of the Dynamic Group of companies, separate Canadian corporations with an interlocking directorate, interlocking share positions, common management and the same executive offices in Calgary.

Mill City has petroleum and natural gas and mining interests in Alberta, Saskatchewan, the Arctic islands, the Northwest Territories, the St. Lawrence basin, Montana and B.C.

Revalued Dollar Creates Problems

By I. H. ASPER

Because of the international character of trade today, when any major trading country revalues its currency the problems thus created are substantial.

The business disputes requiring negotiation are legion. The company which bought foreign goods before the upward revaluation gets a windfall if it is able to pay for them in revalued dollars. Conversely, the company that sold goods in a foreign market will suffer a loss if payment was based on the foreign currency's value at the time the goods were sold.

Resolving the business disputes that follow the current Canadian dollar revaluation will generally depend upon the specific terms of the agreements or customs of the trade which govern the transaction involved.

As well, there are important and complex tax ramifications. When Finanace Minister Benson freed the Canadian dollar from its pegged 92.5c rate of conversion to U.S. dollars, the value of Canadian money moved up to about 97c U.S. As a result of business transactions which were in process but incomplete at the moment of revaluation, some businesses will suffer substantial losses while others will enjoy major windfalls.

BONANZA CUT

A further factor is the tax treatment of those losses and gains — if the gain made on foreign exchange is taxable, the bonanza will be cut in half, and if the foreign exchange loss is deductible, the loss will be similarly softened.

These important tax considerations stem from the fact that at present Canada does not allow deductions for capital losses because capital gains are tax free. Thus foreign exchange wins and losses arising from the current revaluation will have their tax fate decided on whether or not the transaction from which the gain or loss arose was a capital or income transaction.

Canadian law on the point is not well developed, chiefly because in the past the Canadian dollar has been fairly stable and it is only in recent years that Canadian trading has gained major international volume. However, today the tax results of currency value changes can be quiet significant.

For example, a company builds a new plant, financing it with a mortgage from a U.S. lending institution. The mortgage is repayable in U.S. dollars. If the Canadian dollar drops by 5 per cent, the Canadian company will repay $1.05 for every dollar borrowed. On a $500,000 mortgage, that represents an additional cost (or loss) of $25,000. Is it a deductible expense?

An American retires and moves to Canada, receiving a pension from his employer, payable $500 per month in U.S. dollars. By living in Canada, this would have represented $540 in Canadian funds. If Canada had devalued further, by another 5 per cent, the pension would rise in Canadian funds to $565 per month. Would the extra $25 be taxable?

Another frequently encountered situation is that where a Canadian company commits to buy supplies from a foreign company but only pay for them on delivery, in the foreign currency. Assume the price is $100,000 payable in U.S. funds and delivery occurs after the Canadian dollar has risen by five cents It now costs the Canadian company only $95,0000 because the Canadian dollar will buy more American dollars. Is the resulting saving a capital gain or regular taxable income?

GENERAL RULE

The general rule is that where a foreign exchange gain or loss results from dealing in capital assets — buildings, plant, equipment — there will be no tax consequences. Where the profit or loss arises from dealing with assets which are part of the income earning process — finished inventory, raw materials, wage or pension payments and accounts receivable, the profit on foreign exchange will be treated as ordinary income and the loss as deductible expense.

Where a taxpayer has borrowed money repayable in foreign currency, then regardless of the use to which the borrowed money is put, any gain arising from changes in foreign currency exchange rates will not be taxable nor will any loss be deductible.

Which Firm Goes Next Uneasy Topic for Brokers

By PHILIP GREER

NEW YORK (WP) — The most unwelcome topic of conversation among stock brokers these days is which firm will be the next to close its doors or which will soon be merged out of existence. Brokers, who have seen their capital dwindle as both prices and volume headed for the basement, lie awake nights worrying about hordes of customers who get the idea that the entire brokerage business is headed for bankruptcy court.

That, of course, isn't quite the picture. Some firms, through shrewd management — which would be a rarity in Wall Street — or plain dumb luck, have managed to keep their heads above water. Some even claim they are pulling down a slight profit.

Others have been through the wringer and, thanks to fortunate injections of capital, are somewhat less rocky than they were a couple of weeks or months ago. Others are still looking for saviors — any many of them will not be successful.

All of this has created a comedy, where brokers deny they have any problems, and firms keep closing or merging. While watching this Keystone Kop routine, there are a couple of things to keep in mind.

SITUATION SERIOUS

First of all, the situation remains serious. Possibly not as critical as it was a month or two ago, but still potentially explosive. Prices are drifting lower again and volume is down, a miserable combination for brokers with computers and large offices to pay for.

As reflected in the number of mergers that have taken place over the last couple of weeks, though, the securities industry is not about to let a very large firm go under. That would start a snowball of customer panic that could be unstoppable. So, no matter how bad it gets, the New York Stock Exchange will spare no effort — and little of its members money — to make sure there is no big bust.

The same thing holds true for Washington. Richard Nixon may be willing to gamble that he will go to his grave as the man who ended the Vietnam War by starting the Indochina War, but he doesn't want a place alongside Herbert Hoover.

There are no written guarantees with this process, of course. But, for whatever comfort it's worth, investors can be sure that the government, the securities industry and even other financial institutions will move heaven and earth to avoid the panic that would result from insolvency losses to public shareholders.

The investors, though, are not the only cause for concern — maybe not even the biggest one. Unlike most other industries, stock brokers are heavily dependent on each other for survival. The market is, at bottom, the product on an interplay between tens of millions of investors working through thousands of intermediaries such as brokers, mutual funds, insurance companies and the like. For each broker that disappears, the market is made that much smaller and the potential for future growth — is anybody thinking of that now? — is a little more limited. Wall Street waited more than 30 years to recover from the snake pit of the 1929 crash. While that much damage is not likely to happen now — if it did the whole discussion would be academic — the potential for massive investor disillusionment is still just as strong.

So, for Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith to prosper, it needs a healthy Bache & Co.; for Goodbody & Co. to operate, the likes of Walston & Co., Hayden, Stone, and F. I. Du Pont must remain viable. (Before anybody takes pen in hand, those names are for illustration only.) That's just the way the stock market is. General Motors could make and sell its cars if Ford melted into the ground, but brokers cannot operate the same way.

So the frantic public relations race to make the industry into the picture of health is, to a large extent, a matter of survival. The fact, though, is that a number of brokerage firms are in trouble (meaning expenses are outrunning income or working capital is running thin or both, and that the problem is most acute at firms with large fixed overhead).

From My Side Of the Tube . . .

By WALTER McKINNON

This department is not prepared to enter into a dialogue about the Emmy awards. Or about the predictions it published last week.

So there.

Hollywood television correspondent Rick du Brow writes this week that all good ideas go to television when they die.

He was discussing the movie star system — a good idea which died and — what else? Went to TV.

Such former box office drawing cards as Henry Fonda, Glenn Ford, Tony Curtis, Shirley Maclaine and James Garner are making the switch to television — they all have played guest shots and brief roles — but now they're going for series programming.

Why are they switching? The usual reasons . . . security and money. Television's where they find them both, nowadays.

And that's the story. Read on, for what looks like the weekend's top fare.

Tonight

They Get Paid? Department

Remember Laurel and Hardy? Tonight (7 p.m., Channels 2 and 6) it's the 1929 epic, Liberty. A bonus is Jean Harlow, in a bit part. Stan and Ollie escape from prison but in the rush they don each other's trousers.

There are few surprises in Gleason's (7 p.m., Chanel 8; 7:30, Channels 7 and 12) 1967 rerun, but it's lots of fun. Gleason and Carney deal themselves short in a game called King of the Castle. The he-man bit doesn't go over at all well with their little ladies.

Various Regulars Department

Brother Andy assembles his regulars for a full hour without guests. (Andy Williams, 7:30 p.m., Channel 5). Andy and the Osmond Brothers split the vocal duty, with Williams offering More and The Twelfth of Never, while the Osmonds turn to numbers like Keep the Customer Satisfied. The Williams Weirdos carry the main comedy moments repeating their best bits of the season and Andy closes with A Time for Us.

Guest stars Jerry Lewis and Jack Jones help to keep things moving at a fast clip on this edition of the Durante-Lennons musical variety show. (9:30 p.m., Channel 4). Jerry is all over the place playing a director of a play which has Jimmy Durante done up as a Royal Canadian Mountie out to get his man. Jack Jones, Jimmy and the Lennon Sisters offer songs galore, including Light My Fire and Golden Slumbers.

Violence on TV Department

Pirates? Our hero (MANNIX, 10 p.m., Channel 7) stumbles on this possibility as he searches for the missing survivor of a disaster at sea. The man, when Mannix finds him, is terrified and obsessed with the belief he's being pursued by pirates who sank his ship.

Mitch Miller (that was a long time ago, children) is with us for the summer (10 p.m., Channel 11) as a replacement, complete with his famous harmonizing chorus.

Sunday

Daytime Boredom Department

Big Swamp, Big Bayou (AMERICA, 1 p.m., Channel 11) is an excellent production for the nature buff or conservationist. One of 11's travel series specials, it's a trek through the Okeefenokee swampland of Georgia and Louisiana.

The New Majority (4 p.m., Channels 2 and 6) features an all-music show spotlighting singer Judy Lander, the singing Caliope, the Cathedral and the Rosewood Dream.

Appeasing the CRTC Department

Tommy Hunter (7 p.m., Channels 2 and 6) presents his final show of the season, and in the process is presented with an award from the Country Music Association of Nashville. Also, he does some singing — Let the Good Times Roll, Sing a Happy Song and That's All This Old World Needs.

Canada at War (10 p.m., Channel 2 and 6) covers the period from December of 1941 to June of 1942. Coverage of the displacement of Japanese in North America is included.

Old Stoneface Department

A lot of performers think it's easy to get booked back on Ed's show. (Ed Sullivan, 8 p.m., Ch. 2, 6, 7, 12) . Well, concert pianist Eugene List makes a return appearance tonight. His last shot with Ed was on June 20, 1948 — the very first Sullivan Show. Also on hand are singer Sergio Franchi, comics Stiller & Meara and Moms Mabley, recording stars Tommy James and the Shondells and vocalist Margaret Whiting.

Better Believe It Department

Mission: Impossible (10 p.m. Channels 7 and 12) offers first of a flamboyant three-part melodrama in which almost everybody is in costume. In the guise of a magician's troupe, agents infiltrate a plalace to save a monarchy faced with military plotters. Barney saws through inlaid floors to swipe the crown jewels; Paris portrays a magician; and Noel Harrison beams with delight as the child-like prince infatuated with clocks and magic. Great fun and Part II is even better.

Show Will Recall 'Happy Days'

By CHARLES WITBECK

HOLLYWOOD — Is the time ripe for a return to the big band sounds and radio comedy of the '30s and '40s?

Trend indicators — the popularity of the maxi coat, longer hemlines for ladies, kids flocking to Busby Berkeley movies, the reappearance of two-toned men's shoes, the stock market crash, the craze for old cars, the re-issue of a big band album — point in that direction.

Middle-aged spenders are nostalgic about their youth and kids embrace old idols in the name of "camp."

Frank Peppiatt and John Aylesworth, a couple of suave, sophisticated Canadians who were nuts about the radio era and, who incidentally are the creators of Hee Haw, decided to get on the bandwagon and usher the '30s into the '70s, with a summer series, Happy Days.

The two men pieced together a radio tape compiling Bob and Ray routines, Edgar Bergen-Charlie McCarthy witticisms and imitations of the great by unknowns, wedging in the big band bursts of Harry James, Tex Beneke, Buddy Rich and Duke Ellington.

OLD AND YOUNG

The format was Laugh-In and Hee Haw — bits and pieces, short and fast, a sound barrage for the dog days, made for $11,000 ("If we'd shot a filmed pilot it would cost $100,000," he says Peppiatt) and CBS grabbed it.

Beginning Thursday, June 25, Happy Days hopes to amuse both the old and young. The question is, will hip youth know what is going on — or care? Did you have to be alive at the time to appreciate the beauty in I've Got A Gal In Kalamazoo?

Dean Martin's summer show, with the Golddiggers covered similar ground, but Frank Peppiatt believes the Martin series didn't go all out not the way he and partner John plan to recapture an era.

The producers could have spent a fortune on music alone, importing Count Basie and Woody Herman outfits. But they took short cuts, taping all the band numbers in ten days, using a house group fronted by the various greats.

In early April, Harry James blew his trumpet while Helen Forrest sang. Duke Ellington and a side-man came in for a morning session, Tex Beneke played Glenn Miller hits, backed up by a studio vocal group imitating the Modernaires, and Lionel Hampton put in an afternoon's work on the vibes.

Drummer Buddy Rich, Helen O'Connell and the Eberle Brothers rounded out the musical cast while Louis Nye acted as emcee, decked out in a toothy smile and a sharp tuxedo.

There was Nye, up on the blue bandstand, announcing Chattanooga Choo-Choo as Tex Beneke's next number, speaking into one of those huge, old 30-pound microphones that CBS dug out of the warehouse. The sound engineer claimed the antique mike worked better than the new ones. White, dirty palms surrounded the stand, and spinning, glittering balls hung from the ceiling over the dance area. The CBS set designers had researched their job perfectly.

It all looked just wonderful to producer Peppiatt, sitting back, drinking in the lovely Glenn Miller sound. He watched Nye at the mike and said, "Louie is the '30s. He hasn't changed. He never went for the long sideburns and beads. He is perfect for a remote band announcer."

BROTHERS TOM AND DICK
. . . 'Tommy decided we needed a format'

Smothers Bros. Come Up for Air

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Those cheeky Smothers boys, a bit chastened without a weekly television podium, return to the air for a fourth try at the gold ring, with an ABC summer series of eight hours entitled The Other Brothers Smothers Show.

In a test case, perhaps their last chance to attain network grace, the Smothers inherit the Engelbert Humperdinck Wednesday night 10 p.m. slot, Beginning July 8. They are in the time spot following the Johnny Cash summer series starring the Everly Brothers. The Humperdinck show moves to Saturday night, replacing Jimmy Durante and the Lennon Sisers.

The boys are game. Tommy wants a stand, and brother Dick needs a series to pay auto racing bills; so they decided to get back in TV with a summer run. Their one-shot NBC February special was supposed to attract a commitment, but nothing happened.

Some critics cried "sell-out." That hurt Tommy because, as "mother-hen," he tried hard to please fans, taking time to polish the satirical parts, rejecting his weekly, blunt, heavy-stick approach.

STAYING OUT

This summer Tommy won't ride herd, leaving producing chores up to Jerry McPhie. He has writers Bob Einstein and Cecil Tuck back, but loses the gifted David Steinberg. With budgets cut in half for the dog days, the brothers must skimp on sets to pay big money for guests Orson Welles (scheduled for July 15), Burl Ives, Petula Clark. Ted Mack and Nancy Sinatra headline the opener, and Arlo Guthrie, Pat Paulsen, Stan Freberg and Mason Williams are due later.

"Tommy has decided we need a format," says brother Dick, just in from an auto-racing weekend. "I've been trying to tell him that for a couple of years." According to the singing speedster, Tommy will have a "heavy spot," where he can speak his mind. Of course, Tommy will never quite get to the point, being cut off by brother.

A Poet's Corner for "young, groovy guests" is expected to be a regular feature, and occasionally cultural groups, like the Los Angeles String Quartet, may get through a number before laugh lines muscle in.

Otherwise, elements remain the same, with the boys singing and needling, performing sketch material with guests, taking pot-shots whenever Tommy and the writers feel like it. Losing with polished rapier satire in February means a return to impulsive, blunt comment in July.

CAPE TOWN (AP) — Peter Sledge, the American Negro soul singer, stirred a political tempest in a teapot when he autographed a girl's thigh.

Sledge has been appearing recently before non-white audiences, but staying in a Cape Town hotel usually reserved for whites. This week he received permission to perform before whites.

Carol Busch, 19, saw Sledge at a cocktail party.

"He was signing autographs so I gave him my thigh to autograph," "I was delighted to have the signature of my singing idol on my leg."

Carol is classified as colored, a term used here for mulattos.

She is light-skinned, and when a photograph of the autographing session appeared in a newspaper one conservative politician thought Sledge had dared in this segregated land to autograph a white girl's body.

The politician, Jaap Marais, took the matter before a gathering of right-wing South Africans.

"Mr. Marais told the delegates that black men are writing on white girls' legs in white hotels," Carol said later. "I was amused to read that the delegates were all taken in too, and shouted back, 'Shame!' "

Joyce Ignores Blisters To Share Track Glory

Murray Keating Watches Hammer Flight

Bill WALKER

I suppost we're not with it, not if a comparison of the various world media is a true indicator of what is really what in the theatre of international sport. Not with the World Cup soccer tournament, that is.

This is the biggest thing to hit the fan in Britain since the Springboks were told they were welcome but unwanted. Twice. And that issue has created quite a mess.

First it was the South African national rugby team. They came, played well, but didn't exactly enjoy their stay. They were declared personna non grata by the violence set. Tacks were thrown on the rugger field.

Then a visit was scheduled by the Springbok cricket side. This was to be a test series and the visitors were rated as No. 1 in the world.

After several preliminary overs, the Cricket Council finally said "yes". But the government promptly requested the decision be changed to "no".

The "no" had it, and the controversy is still raging. But the violence group had been appeased. They had threatened to unleash a plague of locusts upon the pitch.

But football, or soccer. That's Britain's main dish, and Europe's too. At least it was a few days ago, and there seems little likelihood the trend has changed.

This was before the World Cup Jules Rimet Trophy competition was to begin in Mexico.

Every publication devoted several columns on what would make England tick, or Pele falter, or Uruguay succeed. Televison and radio too, had daily reports of the Bobby Moore stolen bracelet incident, intimidation of the players, the threat of violence, the dishonesty of the peons, and the possible hysteria of the fans.

It was generally regarded in Britain as "Hate England Week" in Mexico.

●

It was front page news. Still is undoubtedly. Wherever people grouped, they asked about the Moore affair. At lunch, in the lounge, after tea. "How would England fare in the heat?" That was another teaser, and debated and speculated upon at length.

When the opening game between Russia and Mexico was played, it was seen on the BBC and Eurovision by an estimated 500 million fans. Passers-by would stop to ask: "What's the score?" Special panels discussed each phase of the game, at the intermission, and at the finish,. The rivals were compared to England, and how that comparison would work, and to whose advantage.

This was a deep and avid interest in the sport, by almost everyone. Naturally, the betting shops were no different, although the English Derby commanded much attention. The question was: What's the price on England? It was 7-2 the day I dropped in. Brazil was 3-1. Uruguay and Italy were the next choices. The odds have since changed, and will with every game. Brazil now is 9-4 to win. That's because of a 1-0 victory over England. But still, it's as it was then — Brazil and England for the final. That was the consensus. The best price of 9-1 would be on Italy, which was given an excellent chance to win. Uruguay was not to be ignored, either, and West Germany was described as the possible spoiler.

A traitor, I took Italy.

Sure, the interest goes deep. Not just because England is involved. But because this is soccer football, the World Cup. This is the World Series or the Super Bowl, take your pick. This is Europe's national game. It is played in more countries than any other sport. It is international in scope and even the average fan can name all the world stars.

National victory is immediately acclaimed in most countries. Take the Netherlands. When a Rotterdam team won the European Cup of Champions by defeating Glasgow Celtic in Milan, Italy, the town went wild. There were so many people on the runways at the Rotterdam Airport, the plane carrying the players had to land at Amsterdam.

Later, when the Dutch team was being feted in a street parade, a well wisher jumped from an over-head scenic car ride so that he could join the fun.

The car ride was 20 feet high. He broke both legs.

Even in losing the Scots were caught up in the fever of the moment. A Celtic fan, having arrived home by air, had difficulty in locating his car at the airport. Only then did he realize that he had left it at Milan. He had driven to the match.

●

But that's the type of devotion the sport demands. And that's the type it gets.

In Britain, and in Europe, and in South America, all of the key games involving national teams have been telecast, live. Mid-week matches started at 4 p.m. Mexico time, which is 11 p.m. London time. But that didn't cut down the viewers. It increased them because the pubs had closed half an hour earlier. In El Salvador, they had a better idea. They named a new beer, "Selection 70", after the team. So win or lose (which El Salvador did), the natives could celebrate, regardless. In the Soviet Union, the afternoon games didn't start until 1 a.m. Moscow time. Vodka sales soared as the fans awaited the kickoff.

In Vancouver, New York, Toronto, and other centres of note, and foresight, some fans have had, and will get again, the chance to be squinting and critical. Closed circuit theatre TV supplies the action. Probably all the live action that will be seen in these parts.

The average joe fan will just have to sit, and wait, and listen, or all three.

Which really isn't getting wholly with it for a major sports event, of world class, and on our own continent, too.

Now, let's be fair.

Is it?

Junior Sprint Mark Falls; Mount Douglas Team Leads

By STEVE HUME

Joyce Sadowick sat on the grass and surveyed the bright blood-stain spreading on her white sweat sock.

A wispy, dark-haired Burnaby Central girl, Joyce looks like she'd be more at home with a slim volume of verse than the brutal competition of women's middle distance.

She watched the blood ooze from punctured blisters with bemused detachment and weighed her chances in the 200 metres the next day.

"It's going to hurt — but I don't care, I'm running anyway."

That was the attitude that had made her the bombshell of the B.C. high school track and field championships at Centennial Stadium Friday evening.

With a courageous performance in the 400-metres, Miss Sadowick even outshadowed glamorous Stephanie Berto's record-breaking dash in the 100.

Joyce served notice on the record in her 400-metre heat with a new mark of 55.4, and wore through a blister in the process.

"She won't run as fast in the final," the experts said, but she turned around and did it again, this time in 55.0, breaking Anne Langdale's provincial scholastic record of 57.1.

Miss Berto easily defeated patty Loverock of Vancouver and Gail Turney of Cowichan in the 100, setting a new Canadian junior record of 11.5 in the process. It was exactly what was expected: it was old hat.

But Miss Sadowick's tremendous effort in the 400 brought some drama to the girl's events. It foreshadowed a head-on clash between Joyce and Stephanie in the 200 today, and Miss Berto's usually automatic double was at least in doubt for a change.

Ryan Ran Four Races in Three Hours

Victoria athletes were in the forefront of competition Friday, and Mount Douglas set about defending its high school team title by picking up 29½ points to lead Centennial and Eric Hamber by 11½ points.

Dan Ryan of Oak Bay showed stamina, strength, and flashes of brilliance as he ran four races in three hours, one of them a record-tying win in the 400-metre final.

The lean, muscular Grade 12 student, following in the footsteps of two illustrious brothers, ran 49.6 in his final after winning his heat in the same event.

He also ran a relay leg in Oak Bay's 400-metre heat, and qualified for the 800-metre final today by finishing his evening efforts with a 1:59.0 clocking.

Dan had trouble looming in that event, however, with five finalists under 2:00 and Mike Reid of Burnaby South way in front with a 1:53.4.

JAVELIN VICTORY

Lindsay Jack and Linda May earned needed points for Mount Doug with a one-two finish in the javelin, Linda winning with a heave of 116'2". Lorna McHattie of Claremont was third to set up an Island sweep.

Another Mount Doug competitor, Murray Keating, heaved the hammer 169.1" to defeat his nearest opponent by almost 20 feet.

In one of the most dramatic clashes of the day, Alberni's Ray Parks fought off a determined Mark Louie of Eric Hamber to win the 100 final in 10.9.

Ray thought he could go faster, and looked easily capable, but a bad start forced him to come from behind, and the well-muscled youngster took advantage of superior strength.

He was still accelerating through the tape while Louie, smaller and slighter, faded in the last 20 yards.

A B.C. junior and scholastic record fell in the discus as Joan Pavelich of University Hill methodically obliterated her opposition.

She threw 150 feet, 10 inches to beat Sandra Hoffman of David Thompson by 20 feet.

Claremont's versatile Miss McHattie was third.

Debbie Brill won the high jump as expected.

Connie Halbert of Victoria High, after finishing third in the 400 final, got less than an hour's rest before going back out with team-mate Wendy Thompson to qualify in the 800 metres.

In relay heats Mount Doug's red hot team of Sid Chow, Ken Armstrong, Rob Harlan and Doug Temple fought off Eric Hamber to qualify first, and West Vancouver's girls, anchored by Miss Berto, tied the B.C. scholastic mark of 49.0 set last year by Mount Douglas.

Finals continued today at 12 noon.

60 Horses Die In Stable Fire

TROIS-RIVIERES, Que. (CP) — Damage was estimated at $200,000 in a fire at a harness racetrack here Friday night. The fire destroyed eight stables and killed 60 horses.

One fireman suffered second-degree burns to his face while fighting the blaze which started in a stable and quickly spread through adjacent buildings.

Mazeroski's Big Grab Saves Ellis' No-Hitter

By UP International

Dock Ellis can afford to be philosophical about his chances of pitching a no-hitter when he's got a guy like Bill Mazeroski behind him.

"I thought about the no-hitter from the fourth inning on. I know guys who don't want to talk about it . . . But if you're going to throw it, you're going to throw it," Ellis calmly said Friday night after he pitched the first no-hitter of the 1970 National Baseball League season to give Pittsburgh Pirates a 2-0 victory over San Diego Padres in the first game of a doubleheader.

But it was easy for Ellis to ignore some of baseball's superstitions about no-hitters because he had Mazeroski to make the big play. In the seventh inning, pinch-hitter Ramon Webster hit a line shot towards rightfield. Catcher Jerry May said: "I though it was a hit."

But Mazeroski dove to his right and speared the ball inches off the ground and Ellis was on his way to the no-hitter.

It wasn't exactly a classic performance since he walked eight and hit a batter and retired the side in order only three times. Three times the Padres had two runners on base in an inning.

"I didn't think I had good enough stuff to throw a no-hitter," the 25-year-old right-hander said. "The ball I was throwing was moving and I walked so many because I was throwing away from the hitters."

Ellis, who only has a 16-19 lifetime mark including a 5-4 record this year, is expected to have a bright future with the Pirates.

Losing pitcher Dave Roberts, hit on the leg by a Roberto Clemente liner in the first inning, allowed only five hits but two of them were solo homers by Willie Stargell.

In the second game, San Diego came back to beat the Pirates 5-2 behind Danny Coombs' six-hitter.

Elsewhere in the National League, Chicago Cubs edged Los Angeles Dodgers 2-1, St. Louis Cardinals downed San Francisco Giants 4-1, New York Mets blasted Atlanta Braves 8-1, Cincinnati Reds edged Philadelphia Phils 3-1 and Montreal Expos nipped Houston Astros 7-6.

In the American League, Milwaukee Braves edged Cleveland Indians 4-1, Chicago White Sox blanked Washington Senators 6-0, California Angels beat Detroit Tigers 5-2, Oakland Athletics nipped Baltimore Orioles 4-2 in 11 innings, New York Yankees blanked Kansas City Royals 5-0 and Minnesota Twins beat Boston Red Sox 5-2.

Errors Make It Easy For Century Inn Club

Century Inn made the most of walks and opposition errors Friday to trip William Head Steelers 9-2 and move into sole possession of second place in the Stuffy McGinnis Men's Softball League.

Century managed only five hits, but benefitted greatly from five walks and six Steeler miscues. All William Head errors came in the first threee innings to send Century away to a 7-0 lead.

Jim Buchan collected two hits in two official trips and Bob Custance banged out a solo home run in the fifth inning to spark Century.

Two double plays also helped pitcher Mike Cox to coast to the victory.

BUT WORLD CUP FEVER . . . . . . MISSING IN NORTH AMERICA

Sleepless Days for Soccer Lovers

By Reuters

Millions of soccer fans around the world have been losing a lot of sleep this month, and Swedish sociologists fear homes may be split up.

But the Kremlin, anxious to avoid problems which could affect the production line, has decided that Russians must go to bed in good time and not be tempted to sit up late.

The problems arise because of massive television coverage for the World Cup soccer tournament in Mexico City relayed by satellite to viewers in their own homes around the globe.

In Britain, a TV audience estimated at 25,000,000—nearly half the population—watched England lose to Brazil, 1-0, June 7.

Because of the time differential, most games played in Mexico come at a time when Europe is normally sleeping and Asians are going about their business the following morning.

Several of the bigger and wealthier soccer-loving nations are putting on regular live coverage by satellite into the early hours of the morning.

The two competing British television systems, the BBC and Independent Television, are each devoting a total of about 70 hours of viewing time to the World Cup until the final June 21. Many of the games seen live will run until 3 a.m.

In Italy, one of the most soccer-conscious countries of Europe, the television service is scheduling 60 hours of World Cup coverage—with 11 matches televised late at night.

French state television has scheduled 18 World Cup matches—11 of them televised live.

Norwegian travel agents say people are postponing vacations in mountain and seaside huts, where there are no TV sets, until after the World Cup final.

But the high cost of live coverage has caused many countries to rely heavily on videotape recordings, flown to them from Mexico after each big game.

In Sweden, where the existing television system offers 43 hours of World Cup viewing, a second channel is just being opened, providing alternative programs.

Swedish sociologists are predicting hundreds of split homes—many permanently—through husband-and-wife clashes over which program to watch.

Mexico offers all-out TV coverage, and there is substantial coverage in Brazil, Colombia, Uruguay, Chile and other Latin American countries.

Brazilian President Emilio Garrastazu Medici has ordered that official programs on radio be delayed so as not to interfere with the soccer reports.

Reuters correspondents report from other centres:

Moscow—Soviet television offers 30 hours of World Cup soccer, either live in the late evening or recorded and shown the next day. Cup matches which go on into the early morning hours are not being shown live.

Western Europe—Outside France, Italy and Sweden, the general average is 30 to 40 hours of World Cup viewing, although Belgium has 48.

Some countries like Austria are ending coverage at 1:30 a.m. local time and care is being taken not to disrupt popular TV serials.

In Switzerland, some games are being broadcast live late in the evening, others are being recorded and broadcast in the early evening or at lunchtime. TV announcers have been apologizing for disruption of regular programs.

Eastern Europe—About 30 hours of live coverage. In Czechoslovakia, it is supplemented by substantial recorded coverage. In Poland, up to 10 minutes daily of film tapes are shown during regular news bulletins. TV officials say full match transmissions would be too expensive.

North America—World Cup matches are not being shown on regular commercial television programs. Twelve cities in the United States and three in Canada are showing cup matches on closed-circuit television, charging admission fees, in special auditoriums.

Hong Kong—The British colony's TV system is broadcasting all World Cup matches three days late. A spokesman said live coverage was too expensive and they could not find sponsors.

Chile—64 to 70 hours of coverage by three television channels.

Colombia—Sunday games will interrupt some children's programs. But even the children in Colombia would rather watch soccer.

HOME TEAM MUST TRAVEL

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The Soviet Union was drawn Friday to play Uruguay in Azteca Stadium in Mexico Sunday in a quarter-final game of the World Cup soccer tournament.

The team of Mexico will have to travel to Toluca to play Italy in another quarter-final.

The draw took place after Mexico and the Soviet Union finished at the top of Group 1 tied with the same number of goals scored and goals conceded.

In Sunday's other quarter finals, England will play West Germany at Leon and Brazil will play Peru at Guadalajara.

ONE DEAD, MANY HURT

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Mexico City's second night in a week of collective pandemonium caused the death of one person and injuries to more than 70 others, the Mexican Red Cross reported Friday.

Hundreds more were reported injured in the provinces where the celebration of Mexico's 1-0 victory over Belgium Thursday stretched into the next morning.

The Red Cross said most of those injured suffered leg fractures after falling from moving cars. Some cars carried 20 or 25 persons.

The only death officially recorded was that of Salomon Macedo Lozano, 37, who apparently fell from the roof of a car.

Royer Leading By Four Shots

CHICAGO (AP) — Unheralded Hugh Royer, who nearly gave up the game, and Arnold Palmer, who owes his millionaire status to golf, share most of the attention as the $130,000 Western Open golf tournament moved into its third round today.

Royer, 33, of Columbus, Ga., Friday recorded a six-under-par 65 for a two-round total of 132 and a four-stroke lead over Palmer and Bobby Nichols.

Palmer, seeking his first 1970 victory, was the only leader affected by a late-afternoon wind and rain storm which halted play for 80 minutes.

Palmer had to quit after hurriedly three-putting the 15th hole and wound up with a 69. Palmer and Nichols, who also carded 69, had 36-hole totals of 136.

Vancouver's Wayne Vollmer, one of two Canadians entered, managed to qualify for the final two rounds by one stroke. He shot a two-over-par 73 Friday to go along with Thursday's even-par 71 for a two-round total of 144.

KERN MISSES OUT

Ben Kern of Toronto was five-over-par 76 Friday, missing the cut with a two-round score of 151.

Steve Reid led by a stroke after a first-round 66, but Friday blew to a 77 for 143. Reid is one stroke behind Jack Nicklaus, who is tied with six others 10 strokes off the pace.

Palmer three-putted the 15th and 17th holes and missed birdie putts of 12 and four feet on 16 and 18 in his round, which included a 20-foot eagle putt on the second hole.

Bowling Berths At Stake Sunday

Three berths in the Canadian finals at Vancouver next May will be at stake at Mayfair Lanes Sunday when four Victoria bowlers go gunning for strikes and spares at 11 a.m. in the 1970 British Columbia finals of Canadian Tenpin Federation competition.

Eight men and four women, who qualified for provincial finals in preliminary rolloffs, will each bowl 10 games in bids for two men's and one women's spots in the 1971 national finals.

Lorna Pollock, who fired the top distaff qualifying tally of 1,903 for 10 games, and Helen Young (1,887) are the city aces competing for the women's berth against Vancouver rivals Sharon Gilder (1,854) and Esther Leitch (1,813).

Brian Grexton (1,984) and Brian Barker (1,867) are the Victorians in the male field, which also includes Vancouverites Ron Carson, the top qualifier at 2,030, and Don Abrey (1,998), Steve Brown (1,982) and Rod Hull (1,941), New Westminster's Roy Stebbe (1,913) and Nanaimo's Ken Bell (1,872).

Barnswell Gets Victory

Western Speedway officials have confirmed that Rick Barnswell was the winner of Wednesday's "figure-eight" stock-car main event.

Western's chief recorder, Bill Loiselle, labored until noon the following day to clear up statistical confusion caused by collisions, drivers taking short-cuts and cars leaving the track and rejoining the field in the 20-lap race.

Loiselle decided that Barnswell was the only one of the 12 drivers remaining at the finish who had completed the full distance. Rick Stanley was placed second, Pete Staton third and Denny Swain fourth.

LACROSSE VETERANS . . . . . . PLAY AT ARENA TONIGHT

Memory Time for Shamrocks

It will be a time for memories at Memorial Arena tonight when Jackie Northup, third highest goal-scorer in the history of Western Canada senior lacrosse; Archie Browning and Whitey Severson, also near the top on the sniping list, and hall-of-famer Arnie Ferguson join 34 other former Victoria Shamrocks in an exhibition appearance.

Hoping their efforts in the oldtimers' game will attract enough fans to make a sizeable contribution to minor lacrosse associations in the Victoria area, the veterans will play four 15-minute (straight time) periods.

* * *

There will be more than over-age athletes for fans to watch.

Before former Shamrock president Doug Fletcher handles the official opening face-off at 8:30, two 30-minute preliminary games will be played by youngsters. Mini-tykes will hit the floor at 7 p.m. and peewees will follow at 7:30.

Victoria Girls' Drill Team will add color and precision to the show with a display during the half-time interval of the oldtimers' tussle.

* * *

For his three five-player units, Norm expects to have available Lou Landess, Len Scott, Ed Popham, Duff McCaghey, Harry Irwin, Al Davies, Bob Monaghan, Jim McNeill, Tom Collett, Ed Longpre, Andy Ovcharick, Art Green Jr., Jim Ranson, Vic Sage, Wilf Scott, Elmer Mathews and George Wilson.

With former Shamrock coach Dave Unwin and Joe Bryant available for netminding chores with his "B" squad, coach Ralph Baker will have some big names on his first unit with Severson and Browning combining with Larry Booth on the front line and Ferguson joining Red McMillan on defence.

Working other shifts for Ralph's crew will be Northup, Tom English, Mel Davison, Alan Gill, Art Green Sr., Austin Cullen, Bob Coutts, Norm Kowalyk, Jack Reid, Gordie Ellis, Jim McKeachie and Paul Calve.

Admission prices will be $1 for adults and 50 cents for students and old-age pensioners.

Prison Head Quits Job to Work on Ouimet Report

By GERARD McNEIL

OTTAWA (CP) — Leaving a hiny new prison system behind, Allen J. MacLeod has quit as Canada's penitentiaries commissioner to take the key job of ironing the important Ouimet report on corrections into policy.

Under the 51-year-old MacLeod, the number of prisons has grown from nine, when he was appointed commissioner in 1960, to 35.

Grim old fortresses like St. Vincent de Paul, north of Montreal, are being emptied and their more promising occupants farmed to new institutions.

Prison trades, once a joke, are beginning to mean something in the new, well-equipped federal jails. Through arrangements with outside schools, inmates may graduate in sophisticated computer courses, or get trade certificates that mean something outside.

Every prisoner has his own cell now, with washbasin and toilet, comfortable bunk, even windows he can open. The older prisons are still bleak, but their end is in sight.

Even the newer ones may have difficulty surviving if the recommendations of the report on corrections last fall by Mr. Justice Roger Ouimet and an expert committee are implemented.

WANTS THEM OUTSIDE

The Ouimet report emphasized keeping all but the dangerous or professional offender outside through probation, trials interrupted before judgment to avoid the stigma of a record, and other such measures.

Mr. MacLeod drafted the 1955 revision of the Criminal Code, was chief of the remissions service—replaced by the National Parole Board in 1959—and chief of the justice department's criminal law section.

Taking over the $24,500 commissioner's job on a temporary basis, until Prime Minister Trudeau announces a successor, is deputy commissioner James R. Stone, 62. He retired from the army, where he had been provost marshal, to join the penitentiaries service in 1958.

With the $120,000,000 penal construction program well under way, and staff and inmate training programs in operation, Mr. MacLeod says he was beginning to find the commissioner's job humdrum.

"Who escaped last night, who assaulted an officer," he said Tuesday talking about his work. "It's quite contrary to my training, which is to deal with matters of policy."

He helped draft current penal policy in 1960—individual cells, no more than 450 men to a prison, an effective rehabilitation program.

COMPARES WELL

Where England still has 9,000 prisoners sleeping three to a cell, the Canadian inmate has privacy. And where the United States abounds with state prisons holding up to 4,300 men, even the old, due-for-destruction ones in Canada have far fewer than 1,000 prisoners.

The changeover was given impetus in 1962 when the 1,200 prisoners jammed into St. Vincent de Paul—which now has 400—did $1,500,000 damage in a riot.

The tall, silver-haired Mr. MacLeod describes this as easily his worst moment in 10 years on the job.

This year's problem is an alarming series of suicides at St. Vincent de Paul, where eight victims have included two teenagers. A special investigation has been launched, and steps are being taken to brighten surroundings at the prison and to hire officers trained to spot depression and withdrawal among prisoners.

The operating budget for the federal system this year is $40,000,000 and the capital budget $20,000,000. About 7,400 prisoners are being held, lower than the 1965 peak of 7,600.

Where a few years ago, one in four was released on parole, these days three out of four are paroled before their sentence is up. Inside good behavior can bring weekend visits at home with the family, and some younger prisoners are released to take university courses.

Most of the prison population is young and noisy, and the old Doukhobor prison in British Columbia has been turned into a sort of sylvan retreat for older prisoners who like peace and quiet. Programs for the young include wilderness trips to find whether nature can heal the scars that crime leavs.

"These things are quite new in Canadian penology," says MacLeod, "and they're steps in the right direction."

Britain's Wilson Strives For Unprecedented Third Straight Election

By JOHN LeBLANC

LONDON (CP) — Harold Wilson, who aims to be the only man in all the long history of British parliamentary democracy to win three general elections in a row, is above all a consummate politician.

The 54-year-old prime minister, who called the June 18 general election on an apparently rising tide of Labor support, is many things to many voters.

He is from the lower middle classes, but an intellectual and a former Oxford don. He is widely publicized as the user of proletarian HP sauce at 10 Downing Street, but attends the opera. He switches easily from the accent of his native Yorkshire to the more effete lingo of the south where most of the votes lie.

Perhaps above all, he is a very tough man in a political jam and has shown a hard-boiled capacity for clawing his way out of trouble.

Ronald Butt, in The Sunday Times, described this characteristic:

"One explanation of his survival power is his nerve in a tight corner. Though he will do almost anything to avoid conflict, Wilson fights savagely when he feels trapped. His expertise also includes a not very pretty line in innuendo."

HANDY WITH HARPOON

The last may be a little rough on Wilson, though it is a fact that he is a handy man with the political harpoon.

In this election—where he campaigned under a low head of steam in the early stages—he will say, seemingly with reluctance, something like:

"Well, I'm afraid I shall have to attack our opponents on the point of . . ."

Then he might shove the blade up to the hilt into Conservative Leader Edward Heath, gently, while casually lighting his pipe and sending up a wreath of smoke for the TV audience.

Chances are that nobody has caught the real Harold Wilson, or ever will until the historians catch up with him. He looks and sounds like a comfortable man of the people, smoking his big pipe calmly at No. 10 while his wife Mary writes cheerful poems that occasionally get published, and sometimes goes on radio with a disc jockey.

But that's only the half of it.

Wilson works hard at keeping the Labor party knitted together—a tough enough job in a parliamentary group that runs the spectrum from pit workers to professors—and beating off the Opposition.

He is somewhere in the middle road of the socialists and continually has to wrestle with a hefty left-wing element among his MPs demanding more radical action.

The left-wingers have frustrated a proposed reform of the House of Lords by Wilson —they want it abolished completely—and also some toughening of trade union law. They humiliated Wilson on both issues, but he manages to live with them.

The prime minister has been described as "a master of government by gimmick," notably by Heath.

This may be a little rough too, though certainly Wilson knows what to do with the gimmick when it comes into his hand. A good instance is the sequel to devaluation of the pound in the fall of 1967.

The Labor government was forced into it as sterling was downgraded in the world's financial exchanges. James Callaghan, then chancellor of the exchequer, was so contrite about the enforced move that he resigned his portfolio. But since then devaluation has helped the British economy, and now Wilson proclaims it as a shrewd move that brought the country off the canvas.

WOOS THE MASSES

Wilson, leader of the Labor party since Clement Attlee resigned in 1963 while out of power, brought it back narrowly in 1964 by beating out the Conservatives under Prime Minister Sir Alec Douglas-Home.

After Heath took over the Tory leadership, Wilson called an election to reinforce his razor-thin majority and wound up with a majority of about 90 seats in the 630-seat Commons. This has since dwindled to 61 in byelections.

It's a fairly normal process for a government with a big majority and the loss apparently does not bother Wilson, who is serenely going about wooing the mass of voters.

The former economics teacher prides himself on identifying Harold Wilson with the ordinary elector. And in a campaign being fought heavily on television, he comes through the box as an uncomplicated friend of the common man, speaking the language of the straphanger on the Stepney bus.

But when the chips are down, Wilson doesn't hesitate to go against majority thinking, and specifically the dogma of the Labor party.

He has continued to support the Americans in Vietnam—against the mass of Labor thinking—and has retained Britain's nuclear capacity against the opposition of his left-wingers. And he has fought them and the powerful Labor-supporting unions for restraint on wages, though getting pushed around on this.

QUIT IN PROTEST

Wilson's political spunk was displayed strongly as far back as 1951 when he was the 35-year-old president of the board of trade (trade minister). He walked out of that high-ranking office on a matter of principle in protest against Labor government cuts in social service spending, and his career came to a dead stop for a time.

He suffered a crushing defeat when he challenged the party leadership of Hugh Gaitskell in 1960, but took over the post after Gaitskell's death in 1963.

Wilson was born in Yorkshire but his entry in Who's Who carefully records that his parents came from that other major northern county of Lancashire. And he has always represented Lancashire ridings—first Ormskirk for 1945-50 and since then Huyton in the Liverpool area.

King-Maker Role Sought

LONDON (AP) — Britain's tiny Liberal party is seeking the role of king-maker in next Thursday's general election.

The Liberals have no hope of winning, but say they expect a close finish between Laborites and Conservatives. They believe this will give them the balance of power in the new House of Commons and force the winners to seek Liberal backing to rule.

"Your vote for the Liberal party will not be wasted," party leader Jeremy Thorpe tells the voters. This rebuts a theme of both major parties.

There were only 13 Liberal members out of 630 in the last Parliament. The party polled 8.5 per cent of the vote in 1966, against Labor's 47.9 and the Tories' 41.9.

It was not always that way. Until 1886, the Liberals, descendants of the Whig party, ruled almost supreme. Those were the days of Palmerston and Gladstone, two of Britain's great political figures.

RA-2 CREW SPOTS UFO

CLEARWATER, Fla. (UPI) — A radio message Friday from explorer Thor Heyerdahl's papyrus boat Ra-2 said crewmen sighted an Unidentified Flying Object on their voyage across the Atlantic Ocean toward Mexico.

The message, by shortwave radio from navigator Norman Baker, said the UFO moved across the horizon for several minutes and disappeared in "a bright orange flash."

The North American Air Defence Command, headquartered at Colorado Springs, Colo., doubted that the UFO could have been connected with any space shot. An officer at NORAD suggested, "It might have been a meteor."

ANGLICAN TO SPEAK

Canon C. Hilary Butler will speak on the movement for union between Anglican and United Church Sunday at St. David-by-the-Sea Church in Cordova Bay.

Butler is Anglican representative on Vancouver Island's church union committee of 10. He will speak at 10:30 a.m.

At the beginning of this year, Cordova Bay United and St. David's Anglican Churches established a committee to promote co-operation.

One of several sub-committees is studying modern worship and will recommend corporate experimentation. Another is examining the possibility of consolidating church properties, and a third is undertaking a religion survey of Cordova Bay and district.

PERSPECTIVES AND PREJUDICES

Lonely Walk Goes On

By REV. J. A. DAVIDSON

The Swiss artist, Giacometti, has a sculpture which shows five men walking toward one another. A viewer's first impression is that these men are going to meet. But close examination shows that no two of their paths will meet. Each man — a thin, angular figure, with an abstract face — will pass in front of or behind all the others, each going his lonely way through the bleak world.

This work of art — which has the ironical title, "City Square" — hauntingly delineates one of the great, pervasive problems of man in our terribly complicated era, the problem of personal isolation, of separation, of alienation.

When I read about that sculpture — I have not seen it — I was reminded of the simple but profound statement of the Jewish philosopher, Martin Buber, "All real living is meeting."

Personhood is essentially mutual. Personhood has reality only in relationships among persons, only in the meeting which comes when the various paths of persons through life intersect. You cannot have personhood in isolation from other persons. The answer to the question, "Who am I?" — the whole "identity" hang-up thing — is not found in deep speculation and in inward-looking meditation on the self: the answer is found only within the context of personal relations.

At the heart of this problem is the principle of acceptance. Acceptance I would describe simply as the recognition of the sacred individuality of the other person, a recognition of his claim to personhood. Acceptance says "Yes" to the other person as a person, even though it may not be able to say "Yes" to all his actions and opinions.

We all find it difficult at times to accept persons whose condition and circumstances are significantly different from ours. And sometimes we have difficulty in fully accepting persons who are very close to us.

Parents often find it difficult to continue to accept their children when, as the children approach maturity, they develop very strong views of their own. And the children sometimes reject the parents when they decline to replace their moss-covered views with these splendid new ones. Even in so intimate a relationship as marriage, full mutual acceptance cannot always be assumed.

We are kept from accepting others by our self-centredness. We are afraid that the idea and ideals of others, and their needs and concerns and claims, may damagingly intrude on our tidy little universes, each with a self as its sun. This kind of fear of others causes us to build barriers against them, barriers which deny us the personal meetings in which we come to real living.

Here is a little prayer I once used at the end of a sermon. It is, of course, a prayer for Christian belivers; but perhaps some of you who aren't Christian believers can, with suitable editing, make some use of it as a basis for meditation.

"Help us, Lord our God, to accept others as you accept us. Forgive us our failures to accept persons who are different from us in color or creed or circumstance, different from us culturally and economically and politically, different from us in their judgments and opinions. Forgive us our failures to accept fully those with whom our lives are bound. Help us to recognize the feelings we have about others which keep us from accepting them; and give us grace to deal with those feelings. We pray in the name of Jesus Christ, in whom and through whom you accept each of us. Amen."

'His Whole Life'

HONG KONG (AP) — Cook Lo Hing, 58, died on the Hong Kong-Macao ferry Fatshan on his last scheduled trip before retiring after working on the boat for 25 years. His son, a sailor on the Fatshan, said: "The ferry was my father's whole life. I think he would have been happy to know he died on it."

All Churches 'Falling Off'

By GEORGE W. CORNELL

NEW YORK (AP) — For the first tme, both Roman Catholic and most major Protestant denominations in the United States are experiencing declines in membership. Instead of only a slowdown in growth, the trend in many cases has become an acutal loss.

"The falling off has become pretty general among the mainline denominations," says rev. Dr. Douglas Johnson, head of the research department of the National Council of Churches.

Why? "The reasons are multiple," he adds — including defections of young people, slackened evangelism, a technological-materialist environment and the pressures of change, but he sees glimmerings of an upturn ahead.

For the moment, however, the five-year downward curve in church growth is at its lowest point so far, and has become, on a broad front, outright reversal.

Only a few major communions, chiefly the Southern Baptists, the Lutheran Church-Missouri Synod and the Mormons, have managed to continue some gains, but except for the Mormons, the gains were shaply reduced.

Other major Christian bodies — the Episcopal Anglican, United Methodist, Roman Catholic, American Lutheran, United Presbyterian, Presbyterian U.S. Southern, Christian Disciples and American Baptist churches and the Lutheran Church in America — reported membership counts were shrinking, in some cases for the first time.

RCs SUFFER SETBACK

Although growth had been tapering off for several years, the new figures released recently for the Official Catholic Directory showed the church had its first real loss — down to 47,872,089, a drop of 1,149.

"Some people don't like what's happening in the church and are leaving it." says Thomas Walsh, the directory's chief statistician for 11 years. He also cited lower birth rates, reducing baptisms and fewer converts.

Over-all, church membership in the U.S. now stand at 128,469,636, about 63.1 per cent of the 200,000,000 population says the 1970 Yearbook of American Churches.

Dog Weighs 160, Still Growing

MISSISSAUGA, Ont. (CP) — When Brutus was born he weighed a pound. Now, 14 months later, he weighs 160 pounds—and is still growing.

Brutus is a Great Dane and his size presents problems to his owner, George McLaughlin.

Mr. McLaughlin lives in an apartment and before he goes to work each morning he has to take Brutus to a dog-sitter.

It is impossible to leave a Great Dane in an apartment by himself, says Mr. McLaughlin.

The cost of a dog-sitter comes to $50 a month. Besides that, Brutus goes through about $80 worth of hamburger meat.

Mr. McLaughlin says if Brutus had his own way, his upkeep would be even higher.

"He loves beer," says Mr. McLaughlin, "but I don't encourage it. He's a little too young for that sort of stuff."

But despite the cost, Mr. McLaughlin intends to keep Brutus because he dislikes small dogs.

FIRST CLASS OR TOURIST

Jumbo Jets Uncomfortable

By STUART AUERBACH
The Washington Post

The Boeing 747 is a whale of a plane. But like Jonah, I found riding in the belly of a whale very uncomfortable.

I flew 747 tourist via American Airlines from New York to San Francisco and returned first class. I found both unsatisfactory — but for different reasons. And if reports by other regular travelers are any indication, there are criticisms regardless of "whose" 747 you fly.

In first class, the service suffered from the size of the plane.

First class seats are virtually sold out every day, so American increased the number of seats from 58 to 86. The stewardesses just couldn't cope, and there was not enough aisle space for more girls.

On the 747, everything seems harried. The stewardesses rush with the drinks and immediately start serving food. By the time the roast beef cart got to my seat only bits and pieces were left. And the other two dishes on the menue — fish and chicken — looked more like the food served in the tourist section.

Lounge a Joke

The highly-touted second-storey lounge for first class passengers was a joke.

As soon as the pilot flashed off the seat belt sign, everyone rushed to the spiral stairs. Once upstairs, we looked around, took a seat — and went downstairs because there was nothing else to do there. No drinks were served at the bar.

(I was told that the lounge was filled during my flight west because the rock group The Jefferson Airplane was there, but I was in the tourist section then.)

The airline does try to make you feel special in the first class section. Your name is pinned to your seat, and the morning paper is waiting for you. Still, to me, the service suffered in comparison to a first class flight on slimmer planes such as the 707.

But in tourist, strangely enough, the service seemed better than the usual tourist flights. The meals come from carts, not plastic trays, and there is a choice of entrees.

Although the service was deft on my tourist flight, it is not always that way. On the flight east, when I was in the first class cabin, the pilot asked tourist passengers to return to their seats because their strolls blocked the aisles and kept stewardesses from serving the food.

And there were always lines for the rest rooms — in both first class and tourist.

Changes Planned

Continental Airlines, which is getting three 747s for its Hawaiian run, noted these problems, too. The airline is spending an extra $100,000 to make last-minute changes in the interior — adding cross aisles, changing rest room doors, adding a tourist lounge and setting aside some rest rooms for women.

My major complaint with the tourist section was its massive size. It looked like a decorated bar with rows of benches, and made me feel uncomfortable.

The good part about the plane's bulk, however, is that I was able to stretch out across an empty middle row of seats and sleep during the movie — allowing me to arrive refreshed in San Francisco.

Despite my complaints, and those of other travelers, the 747 remains a very popular plane with the flying public. Occupancy on all its runs averages 70 per cent.

But as I left the plane in New York I told a flight service representative that I found the 747 wanting. He nodded and whispered, "All regular travelers do."

NO TILT THERE NOW

HONOLULU (AP) — Pio Yagyagan didn't like the tilt in his garage roof, so he fastened a rope to a garage beam and tied it to a tree across the street.

The repair job didn't last long. Friday, a fire engine hurrying to a nearby blaze struck the rope and down tumbled Yagyagan's garage.

Presbyterians Consolidate Missionaries

HALIFAX (CP) — A step towards integration of the three missionary agencies of the Presbyterian Church in Canada was taken Friday when the 96th general assembly agreed to set up a newly-designed board of world missions next year.

The general board of missions will be dissolved next June and the two divisions of the Women's Missionary Society will integrate their administrations with the new board which will be responsible for all mission work at home and overseas.

The board will have one general secretary with directors of each department. All mission programs will be unified under the new board of world missions.

90 Miles Per Hour on Land Now Legal

By RICHARD PURSER
Times Quebec Bureau

MONTREAL — Due to a new breakthrough in Canadian railroading, it is at last possible to cover a distance of nearly 300 miles in this country at an average speed of over 90 miles per hour without taking to the air.

Canadian National Railways' Turbotrain, which began regular service between here and Toronto on May 25, is no match for the 130-m.p.h. Tokyo-Osaka express, which after all had a special track built to handle it, and is only barely on a par with some of the high-speed trains being introduced on existing trackage in Europe.

But considering the devastated situation of railroad passenger traffic in North America, it could be an important step in alleviating the growing transportation tangle. In the United States there is only one equivalent experiment seeking to bring passengers back to the trains, the Metroliner between New York and Washington. (A Turbotrain similar to Canadian National's, but smaller, was unable to make adequate use of its high potential speed on the poor roadbed and convoluted right-of-way between New York and Boston.)

12,000 Daily

Some 12,000 persons travel between Montreal and Toronto daily. About half go by private car, using the MacDonald-Cartier Freeway, Ontario's tribute to biculturalism which is universally known simply as Route 401. The drive of 340 miles or so takes six hours, more or less, depending on points of origin and destination in the metropolitan areas, avoidance of rush hours, truck traffic, tourist traffic, snow, ice, fog, and road-blocking accidents, to say nothing of the driver's ability to smash the speed limit while watching for Ontario Provincial Police cars lurking behind overpasses.

About one-quarter of the total traffic goes on the 35 or so planes that operate each way daily between the metropolitan areas, a small fraction goes by bus, and about 15 to 20 per cent take the CNR—no small percentage of traffic to be carried by rail in the North American context, and that was before the Turbotrain, which the management hopes will make further heavy inroads on road and air traffic.

Highway Boring

Here's hoping they are right, for if there is one verdict regular Montreal-Toronto travellers are agreed on, it is that the trip by car or plane is no treat. Route 401 is one of the least interesting of superhighways, almost entirely set in flat back country away from the St. Lawrence River and Lake Ontario and the interesting towns that dot their shores. It is boring to the point of being soporific, and becomes more sleep-inducing with each successive trip.

The plane trip? When everything goes well, when the airport buses are not caught in traffic, when the weather is satisfactory, when the aircraft are on hand for the flight as scheduled, when check-in lines are not too long and the wait for baggage is short, and when ground and circling delays are at a minimum, the downtown-to-downtown trip can take less than three hours. But every traveller on the route has his tales of woe when it did nothing of the kind.

CN's Montreal-Toronto trains operate between stations located directly at the largest hotels in the respective cities, the same hotels at which the airport buses make their prime stops. The management is betting that if it can narrow the gap between rail time and elapsed air time, great numbers of regular travellers fed up with the irritations of air travel will switch.

Five Hours

Many already have, courtesy of the Rapidos, which CN has been running twice daily since Expo 67, making the 335-mile trip in five hours, for a respectable average of 67 m.p.h. But the Rapidos are run with regular heavy passenger-car equipment which inhibit their ability to sustain high speeds.

The Turbotrains, designed, built and owned by United Aircraft Corporation and leased to CN, are light, low-slung, super-streamlined, with a low centre of gravity and single-axled, articulated cars whose axels "steer" around curves rather than relying on flange contact alone for guidance. One the Turbotrains get up to their usual operating speed of about 90 m.p.h., they rarely decrease it, even for curves. This knocks about an hour off the trip, cutting it to four hours and five minutes, for an average speed of 82.35 m.p.h. The central 277 miles of the trip—between the metropolitan areas, where some slowdowns are necessary—are covered at an average of 90.67 m.p.h. The 47.4-mile stretch from Brockville to Kingston is done in 30 minutes flat. (No stops are made.)

CN thinks the Turbotrain will prove highly competitive. It leaves Montreal and Toronto at 7:45 a.m., arriving in the opposite city at 11:50, allowing travellers time for a business lunch and a full afternoon's work. The planes can't beat that by much.

May Be Mistake

But CN has seen fit to charge a $3 premium over the Rapido fare for Turbotrain travel, which may be a mistake. This brings the coach fare to from $12.90 to $15.90, depending on day of travel, and club car fare to a flat $22.90. This still makes top class by rail cheaper than the $25 economy-class air fare—but the Turbotrain lacks something of the old elegance of railroading that the Rapidos still retain. The Turbotrain is really an airliner on the ground. Gone is the dining car; stewardesses serve club-car passengers airline-style tray meals on tables that fold out from the backs of the seats ahead. The meals are included in the passage price.

Coach passengers don't even get that. They can patronize a cheap cafe counter in the centre of the seven-car train, bringing sandwiches, hamburgers, soft drinks, etc., back to their seats to eat.

But the domes at either end of the train, in the dual propulsion units (there is no locomotive as such) are a treat. One dome provides adequate lounge space for up to 24 coach passengers and the other more luxurious space for eight club-car passengers. Passengers in both lounges can look straight over the engineman's shoulder through a glass window and right up the fast-advancing track. (The engineman merely moves to the other end of the train to head it in the opposite direction.)

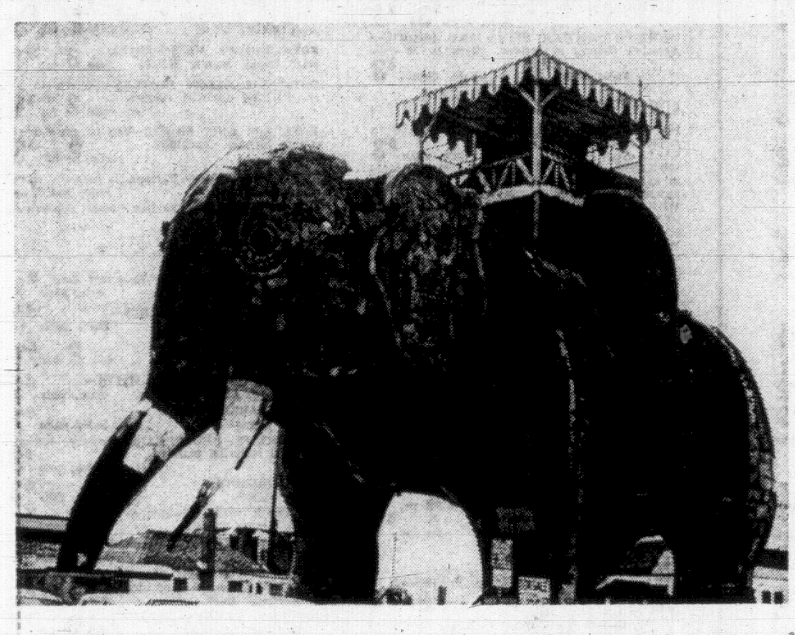
Lucy the Elephant On Her Last Legs



GIANT ELEPHANT, Lucy, stands on valuable property in Margate, New Jersey, where she was built in 1902. Lucy stands 65 feet high and is a full 80 feet long. A little the worse for wear, she was, in her prime, a beautiful white structure made of ship's timbers and sheet metal but now her color is mud-grey and she looks slightly dilapidated.

By MICHAEL KERNAN

MARGATE, N.J. (WP) — In 1903, a rainstorm hit the New Jersey beaches, and Lucy sank to her kneecaps in the sand, but that wasn't the worst thing that happened to her. The worst thing was when they made her into a tavern in 1905 and people kept turning over the oil lamps and setting her afire so often that the bartender had to have electric lights installed. It was quite a sizable job because inside Lucy there were 11 rooms, built in 1902 when an English physicians and his family spent the summer there.

Lucy, once the pride of Margate, N.J., is an 80-foot elephant made of ship's timbers and sheet metal, 65 feet high, with a spiral staircase inside her left rear leg.

Built 88 years ago for $38,000 dollars by James V. Lafferty, a Philadelphia developer who used her for a real estate office, the elephant hotel is in a sense the mother of margate, a community about a mile south of Atlantic City.

Today Lucy is on her last (22 feet long and 10 feet long and 10 feet across) legs. The metal skin has torn away in places or hangs loose in the ocean breeze, windows are broken, even the 18-inch eyeholes, and the sturdy structure once white, now mud-color — is exposed in spots to the weather.

The John Gertzen estate, which had owned Lucy since 1886, is trying to sell the land under her for a reported $400,000 dollars to a Washington syndicate for a condominium and would sell the elephant itself to Margate for a nominal sum.

Lafferty erected two other elephants, at Cape May and Coney Island — the latter often erroneously associated with the old slang phrase for marvel mongering, "to see the elephant" — but neither of these made it into the 20th century.

In any case it seems certain that Lucy is the world's only surviving four-bedroom elephant. She also contains a large parlor, dining room, kitchen, bath and other small rooms, connected by 350 stairs and brightened by 22 windows. Lucy's ears are 17 feet long, her tusks 22 feet, her trunk 36 feet, and on a good day she can be seen from eight miles away.

WARMTH AND FRIENDLINESS HERE

New Tourist Vista: Turkey's Turquoise Coast

By JAMES FERON

ANTALYA, Turkey (NYT) — For years, even decades, a visit to Turkey meant simply a visit to Istanbul. Then the Aegean coast opened up, with its snug harbors, coastal villages and evocative ruins. Now there is something else — the Turquoise Coast, a 250-mile-long playground beside the Mediterranean.

The area became fully accessible to casual tourism only recently, thanks to the completion of a spectacular highway from Antalya to Mersin.

The road winds through wooded hills, dips down to the sea and passes some of the most intriguing archeological sites anywhere — the remains of early Mediterranean civilization. And it takes the visitor to parts of Anatolian Turkey that once lay beyond the reach of all but the most adventurous tourist.

Despite stories of anti-American incidents, the visitor finds warmth and friendliness here. Children are offered animal rides, shown a fisherman's catch and treated with care in restaurants, while language barriers dissolve with a bit of laughter and a few gesticulations.

Parts of the Turquoise Coast have been open for some time, especially the western sector ending at Antalya. But even five years ago, Antalya had only one recommended hotel for foreign guests.

Now there are many, mostly beach hotels or motels in Antalya and elsewhere along the coast, to accommodate the motorists arriving from West Germany, Italy, France, Britain and — more and more — from the United States.

The coast is still devoid of first-class hotels, although the modern motels being built by competing service-station chains are all that the touring family requires.

In Ankara, we rented a station wagon and made a circular tour from Ankara first heading straight south to the coast (a long day's drive). We then proceeded west from Silifke for a sweeping coastal tour before turning inland again at Antalya for the return to Ankara more than a week later.

The traveler also can turn east at Silifke and begin the coastal tour at Mersin, 50 miles away, or proceed beyond Mersin to Antakya, near the Syrian border. One would have to double back, however, for the long, and more interesting, coastal trip westward to Antalya.

Antalya is the site of ancient Antioch, which became the third greatest city of the Roman Empire with a half-million inhabitants (10 times today's population). Notorious for its depravity, it was chosen for missionary work by St. Peter, who was born near Mersin.

Today, Antalya is a quiet town of 32,000 inhabitants, many of them Greek-orthodox Arabs. Its wide streets are cooled by a constant sea breeze, a reminder that the place has long been known for its gentle climate, even in midsummer. It has an archeological museum that is especially rich in mosaics.

The road to Anamur and Alanya recalls the Amalfi drive in Italy. On the one side, steep hills, perhaps covered with fir trees and fields of wildflowers; on the other side, the blue-green sea. An occasional grove will contain a tent or a picnicking family. A fortress or a castle comes into view, then disappears again.

Alanya was once the end of the road for travelers coming from the west; that is, before the final stretch of highway to Silifke was completed last year. Already, the seafront is a succession of new motels.

We stayed at the hotel (motel) Yeni, a serviceable hostelry that was medium class for the area. The bill, including two rooms with three beds, breakfast and dinner, was $12.

Alanya spreads out behind an 800-foot-high coastal promontory that is topped with a castle. The drive up to the castle is worth it, if for no other reason than to see where you've been and where you're going. There are also fine boat trips along a coastline honeycombed with grottoes, or an even longer jaunt to Cyprus. Now that the coastal road is open, the potential of the entire area is finally being realized. But it still remains unspoiled, and, hopefully, should stay that way for some years.

Charge Set If Police Find Body

Greater Victoria police hinted Friday the only thing preventing them laying a murder charge in the case of the missing George Finster is the absence of his body.

They called again for help from the public on the case and reaffirmed a $1,000 reward for information leading to the body of the 32-year-old bachelor from Germany they believe was slain in Victoria last Sept. 30.

And they revealed for the first time that human blood and hair had been found in a car seized on the lower mainland and a suspect had been questioned "recently."

★

A police statement said:

"It is the general consensus of the police departments and investigators involved that there may be sufficient evidence to take the Finster case to the courts if his body is located.

"Police have questioned a suspect and seized a car on the lower mainland, in the trunk of which human blood and hair has been found."

"The Greater Victoria police departments confirm that the offer of the $1,000 reward for information leading to the whereabouts of Finister's body is still in effect."

Friday's statement follows one two weeks ago in which RCMP, Victoria and Saanich officers revealed that a joint investigation indicated Juergen Dietrich (George) Finster, whose last address was 1124 McKenzie St., had been murdered early last Sept. 30.

★

Finster was in the Red Lion beer parlor at 3366 Douglas on the evening of Sept. 29, left shortly before midnight and was last seen standing by his car, talking to a man who was driving a late model car.

Finster's car was found abandoned on nearby Ardersier early on the morning of Sept. 30.

Questions from police to public:

Did anyone see Finster, alone or with anyone else, driving or pushing the car from the Red Lion parking lot to Ardersier?

Did anyone see a man standing in front of a car with its hood up on Ardersier, or two men, or hear them talking?

Officers ask that anyone with information contact their local police department.

Price Squeeze Cuts Low-Rent Housing

By PETER McNELLY

Rental accommodation for low-income families in Victoria is becoming scarce as the 20-cent bus ride.

And a price squeeze of rising taxes and living costs is hitting pensioners hard, forcing some to sell their homes.

"You just can't find rentals for families with children," says Victoria Real Estate Board president P. G. Jackson.

A check of rental offerings at the housing registry in Spencerhouse on Cook Street confirms this observation.

Registry worker A. A. Andrews says few of the 100 listings available at any given time at the registry ask $100 or less.

Andrews said it is "almost impossible" to find a two-bedroom house at rents the average family can afford.

●

The Rose-Blanshard urban-renewal project created low-rent accommodaion for 184 families. But this is by no means sufficient to exhaust the demand.

Blanshard Court manager E. S. Roberts of the B.C. Housing Management Commission said he has an "exceptionally large" waiting list for openings at the court, particularly for two-bedroom apartments.

He said most people on the waiting list are families with one to three children.

"Separated wives with children are one of the most difficult problems, and there is almost no provision for widowed senior citizens," Roberts said.

Many families in Victoria are paying 50 per cent of their monthly income for rent. Roberts said this often runs to $200 a month.

Projects like Blanshard Court, he said, can house these people for almost half that amount.

The 1968 annual report of the Economic Council of Canada said a family was living in poverty if 70 per cent of its monthly income went for food and shelter.

●

Generally high apartment rentals and decreasing numbers of inexpensive single-family dwellings will likely force more borderline poor families over the Economic Council's 70 per cent figure.

The problem of low-cost housing also hits hard at pensioners on fixed incomes. These people are immediately affected by any increase in the cost of living.

A small rise in food prices, hydro bills and property taxes can explode a tightly-budgeted pension income. Sometimes the only way to get out of the bind is to sell one's home.

Mrs. Catherine Horne, executive director of the Silver Threads Service, says low-cost apartment housing for pensioners eventually will be available in Victoria.

A 17-storey apartment building is currently under construction at the corner of Quadra and View streets. When finished, it will provide 358 suites at rents between $85 and $90.

Originally scheduled for completion this year, the current construction lockout will delay the project indefinitely, said Mrs. Horne.

Rents will be low because the apartment is being built under the limited-dividend section of the National Housing Act.

Under this section of the act, the builders (West Park Developments Ltd. in Vancouver and Alberta) have agreed to let Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation fix rents in exchange for financing at favorable terms.

The Capital Regional District Board's 1969 study on retirement estimated 1,200 dwelling units would have to be created in Victoria to relieve the substandard housing problem for the aged.

The study set the figure based on conditions existing in mid-1968, and Mrs. Horne estimates the need has increased since then.

"People will continue to come here to retire and rents continue to increase," she said.

When the View and Quadra high-rise is finished, she said, many pensioners will be able to move into premises vacated by those who move into the high-rise.

But Roberts said single-family rental dwellings are getting older and run-down.

"Victoria is growing old," he said. "Many older homes are being torn down. The situation for senior citizens is heartbreaking."

Hopes for private low-rental housing for families appear dim.

●

"The private market is not providing rental accommodation for the ordinary family," says Jackson.

And he said builders have been slow to construct apartments under the limited-dividend plan because it is not as profitable as ordinary apartment construction.

Government, service club and church-sponsored housing projects have tried to fill this vacuum, he said. But the demand for family housing exceeds the supply.

Jackson said he thinks the limited-dividend plan will catch on eventually.

Meanwhile, the poor and nearly-poor will just have to take what they can get.

Meet Senses Helpless Mood

By HUMPHRY DAVY

It is estimated there are between 5,000 and 7,000 people out of jobs in Victoria and yet only 40 persons turned up at a meeting to discuss a course of action to improve employment and welfare conditions.

This puzzled officials of the Victoria Citizen's Committee of Unemployment, sponsors of the meeting in First United Church Hall.

Chairman Frank Cox put it down to the lack of communication between the committee and jobless, but admitted there might be other reasons, such as apathy or a feeling that little can be done to improve conditions.

But if the attendance was small, there was no lack of interest among members of the audience in discussing ways and means of getting governments to alleviate the plight of the unemployed and the poor.

Alex Bundy of the Vancouver Unemployed Citizens' Welfare Improvement Council, said the jobless and the poor must act if they want social reforms.

"Petitions and briefs are useless," he said. "This talk of war against poverty is just rhetoric."

★ ★ ★

He predicted that before any major reforms are adopted in Canada there would be "blood on the streets."

"I'm not stating anything dramatic," he said. "I'm stating facts."

He said in France only violent riots forced the government to initiate reforms.

"It shouldn't be war on poverty — it should be war on the rich," he said.

Bundy said the Vancouver group planned to seige the office of Health and Welfare Minister Gaglardi to protest his lack of action to improve the lot of the poor.

Gaglardi was accused by Bundy of exploiting the poor and reviving the erroneous belief that the poor are "deadbeats" and "people who think society owes them a living".

★ ★ ★

Labor unions were also criticized by some members of the audience and Victoria Labor Council secretary Larry Ryan who was present, was forced again and again to defend the position of organized labor.

He was asked why the labor movement was not more militant and refrained from calling a general strike.

He replied that a general strike was contrary to the philosophy of collective bargaining — bargaining with employers in good faith.

Unions were also accused of taking little interest in the general problem of unemployment — of being only concerned with unemployment as it affected their locals.

"Canada is the only country in the world where the unions are controlled by another country," said Bundy.

"Unions will also be faced with job busting if they don't take more of an interest in the general problem of unemployment," he added.

Rifle Range Secrecy Denied

Lennard Jones, president of the Sooke Rod and Gun Club, denies there was any "bureaucratic secrecy" involved in the government's leasing 40 acres to the club on Otter Point Road for the creation of a rifle range.

He also asserts in a written statement that the removal of Times reporter Humphry Davy and others from the site, after neighbors objecting to the range had asked him to be present prior to a sound test, was justified.

"Since the complaint related to the sound of shooting on other properties, rather than on the range itself, these people were naturally asked to leave, as the rough state of the land during construction might have led to injury. This was a normal precaution and had nothing to do with bureaucratic secrecy."

Jones says that after the club had been searching for a suitable site for two years the club applied for a lease in December 1968.

The lease was granted May 16, 1969, and notices put in the newspapers in an effort to increase interest in the group's safety shooting programs.

"Before granting the lease, the lands department inspected the property, and again the close neighbors were informed of our intentions. No objections were made."

Jones says that, to date, the club has not been directly informed of any objections.

"The only communications have been telephone calls to individuals."

He adds that the first official complaint was lodged May 19, 1970, a year after the lease was granted and after the club had completed a $2,500 road building and ground clearing operation.

"Mr. (Tom) Townsend, the nearest resident, informed Mr. (Jubiel) Wickheim that he had complained to the lands department. Mr. Wickheim immediately stopped work on the range and went the same day into Victoria to see Mr. (Frank) Rhodes (lands department official) and suggested that the club make an actual firing test on the property to prove the validity or otherwise of the complaints."

It was the day of the test, May 27, that Davy and others invited by Sooke resident Fred Jackson were asked to leave.

Jones says that nothing will be done until Rhodes' report has been examined by the department and a decision made.

Driver Fined $500

Raymond Youck, HMCS McKenzie, was fined $500 and prohibited from driving anywhere in Canada for three years after pleading guilty in provincial court today to criminal negligence.

Youck was driver of a car which collided with a car driven by John Heffernan, 2399 Dalhousie, on Esquimalt Road just east of Catherine Friday night.

Heffernan, who was trapped in his car and had to be freed by the Victoria fire department, is in St. Joseph's Hospital with a broken leg and other injuries. He is in good condition.

Joseph Volk, 21, of 1029 North Park, a passenger in Youck's car, suffered head injuries, and is also in good condition in Royal Jubilee Hospital.

Youck and Elizabeth Kenney, 3345 Woodworth, 21, suffered minor injuries and were released after treatment.

Police said Youck's car skidded for 275 feet before hitting Heffernan.

The Heffernan car was pushed backward 75 feet.

"I regard this as a gross offence," said Judge J. A. Byers. "The only reason I'm not sending you to jail is because it would ruin your career in the armed forces."

DANGER SIGN AID OFFERED

The Capital Region Safety Council has offered to assist the provincial parks branch and the Greater Victoria Water Board in erecting fences and warning signs in dangerous areas.

The council's offer came after a report that no precautionary measures would be taken in the Niagara area near Goldstream where a man fell 150 feet to his death Sunday.

Provincial parks director Robert Ahrens said he couldn't put up signs and fences because the canyon was Greater Victoria Water district land, not parks land.

Water commissioner Ron Upward said he wouldn't be putting signs in the area either. He said the canyon was divided between the parks and water boards but he didn't know the exact boundary.

Safety council president G. C. Parrot said the impasse between the two boards as to which will erect the fences and signs at Niagara Canyon seems to stem from an unclear boundary rather than any disagreement about the requirement of such measures.

Parrot suggested that the necessary signs and fences be built under the name of the safety council.

He said the problem of who actually builds and pays for them can easily be resolved between the two boards and the council.

Farm Report 'Slanted to East'

A B.C. Federation of Agriculture economist said today a federal task force report on agriculture is slanted in favor of the eastern provinces.

Jack Wessel said the group's findings tended to favor more the Maritime and Quebec provinces and at least two recommendations, if implemented, would jeopardize B.C.'s agricultural industry.

The study dealing with farm economics, use of land, modern technology, tariff policies and many other aspects of agriculture, was released two weeks ago.

It is being studied by Vancouver Island and mainland farm groups.

Some of its recommendations are controversial and these will be thrashed out between federal officials and provincial ministers and their deputies at a meeting in Ottawa at the end of June.

Wessel said the report tended to be one sided as members of the study group were all economists.

"The group should have included a producer and, perhaps, a sociologist," he said. "Agriculture does not only involve dollars and cents, but people as well."

Wessel gave two examples which he said showed the report favors eastern provinces.

FAVORS EAST

It recommended the abolition of freight assistance for the movement of feed to the provinces, he said.

"But for all provinces, except B.C., which receive freight assistance there are equivalent measures to offset the withdrawal of the subsidy," he said.

If freight assistance was abolished and not replaced by equivalent measures, it would mean that cost of feed grains would rise sharply in B.C., he said.

The recommendation urging the end of tariffs on United States potatoes, onions and carrots would only benefit the maritime provinces, he added.

He said the Maritimes produced low-cost potatoes and had a large market for them in Eastern United States.

"It would have the opposite effect on B.C.," he said.

Arthur Mayse . . .

IN SOME OF OUR VANcouver Island provincial parks, you will find vestigal traces of good work done a long time ago. A wishing well . . . a section of mossy rock wall that keeps a sidehill path from crumbling . . . a creek bridge or a lookout point. These are reminders of a desperation program that put young unemployed men to work in the dirty, dirty thirties.

Volunteers were based in camps administered by British Columbia Forest Service, which in those years had parks under its wing.

For their labors, the men earned food, shelter and a few dollars each month. They also got a chance to work, and so escape the soul-rot that saps those condemned to idleness.

I am harking back to those years and those camps because we have come once more to a difficult time. Our provincial government might well give thought to a sensible and hardnosed relief works program for the unemployed young whom private industry cannot at present absorb.

In a province that should be turning more of its park reserve acreage into finished parks, there is no lack of projects that need pushing ahead.

Also, the West Coast Trail waits completion. With federal assistance, young people working under experienced supervision from tent camps along the trail could telescope a job that may otherwise be years in the doing.

The program I suggest is by no means visionary. It worked before when times were tough, and I think it would work now. And it beats welfare — the something-for-nothing that has become a cancer in this province as in all others.

TILLICUM ELEMENTARY held its school sports Friday, and among the fleet-feet who ran in one race was a fairhaired second-grader whose name you may remember.

She's Florenda Joy Dick, but she is not the pale and quiet little girl who went down to Mayo Clinic at Rochester, Minn., for life or death surgery a year ago last March.

At the moment of writing, I don't know how Florenda Joy made out in the school race. But life has taken on glowing new colors for the child whom Victorians by the hundred staked to a future.

Through their contributions, the heart defect that would have doomed her to death in her teens was mended. And the effect has been nothing less than magical.

"She's a real little tiger," said Florenda's father, David Dick of 326 West Obed. "She's growing fast, she has a fine appetite, and it's hard to believe she was once so subdued and quiet."

To make her happier still, Florenda has two dogs now — faithful friend Velvet, and a new puppy. Also, she's looking forward to her eighth birthday, which is coming up on July 10.

And to complete a bright picture, I've just learned that she placed third in a close race.

WORM-TURN, A PLANEtary organization for disenchanted burden bearers, can now claim three members. One is my wife, who is designing an under-the-lapel button on which will be pictured a red, turning worm. The red is for anger. I also belong, and a likely recruit has come forward in the person of a woman who refuses to let her aged mother become a public charge.

But she does feel that the heavy expenses involved in keeping her mother in a rest home should be recognized as a legitimate deduction from income for tax purposes. So do I.

However, Ottawa, which plans to spend $300 million in tax collections on hothouse bilingualism over the next four years, takes a different view.

Worm-Turn assignment:

Ponder that proposed expenditure. Does it impress you as (a) urgently necessary, (b) advisable, or, (c) a colossal waste of revenue better devoted to other purposes?

you're sew right

By DALE CAVANAGH

When Harvey Berin uses zippers in his lovely designer originals, they are invariably inserted by hand. Ever a perfectionist, Mr. Berin deplores the look of a hard line of machine stitching emphasizing the presence of a zipper.

In the sewing instructions given with a pattern, it is often recommended that a machine applied zipper be inserted while the sections are still flat or before some of the major seams are joined. This prevents making minor but sometimes important fitting adjustments.

Yet, to make the fitting adjustments and then get the all but finished dress in the proper position on the machine in order to stitch a zipper in place is quite difficult.

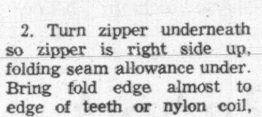
If a zipper is sewn in by hand this difficulty is overcome. It not only is easier to manipulate, but it looks better and adds a designer touch to your clothes.

Of the two basic types of zipper insertions, Mr. Berin prefers the lapped closing, therein one opening edge is lapped over the other, completely covering the zipper. Instructions are given below.

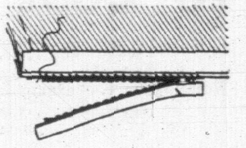
THE LAPPED CLOSING

Baste opening edges together (into which zipper will be inserted) along seam line, the entire length of opening. Baste by hand with short stitches, or by machine set at six stitches per inch. Press seam open lightly.

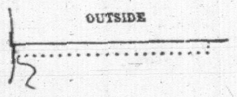
1. Open zipper. Place zipper face down on seam allowance, with bottom stop of zipper at lower end of opening. Keep edge of nylon coil or metal teeth along basted seam. Using a small running stitch, sew tape to seam allowance only, ⅛" from teeth of zipper.



2. Turn zipper underneath so zipper is right side up, folding seam allowance under. Bring fold edge almost to edge of teeth or nylon coil, allowing clearance for pull tab. Sew along fold edge near teeth using tiny back stitches, ⅛" apart.



3. Close zipper. On outside, sew ⅜" from basted seam using tiny back stitches ⅛" apart, catching in the unattached zipper tape underneath.



4. Remove the temporary seam bastings and its done! It looks like this finished.

DEAR ABBY . . .

Sweet Sue a Son

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: My sister has two children, a boy nine and a girl 12. The girl likes to dress her little brother up to look like a girl. She puts make-up on his face, and puts curlers and ribbons in his hair. Then she gives him girl's clothes and heels to wear. He makes a very pretty-looking girl, but what worries me is the way he enjoys it. In fact he begs his sister to dress him up and call him "Susie."

I have hinted to my sister to discourage this kind of play but she sees no harm in it, and is relieved that sister and brother play so "nicely" together. Am I wrong to be concerned? My sister is divorced, so there is no father influence in the home.—Concerned.

DEAR CONCERNED: You could be "concerned" with good reason. Quit "hinting" and tell your sister that environment plays an important role in gender identification. In other words, boys will be boys—unless they'd rather be girls, and hers is off to a girlish start.

As I promised last week, my TEN COMMANDMENTS FOR WIVES:

1. Defile not thy body neither with excessive foods, tobacco nor alcohol, that thy days may be long in the house which thy husband provideth for thee.

2. Put thy husband before thy mother, thy father, thy daughter and thy son, for he is thy lifelong companion.

3. Thou shalt not nag.

4. Permit no one to tell thee that thou art having a hard time of it; neither thy mother, thy sister nor thy neighbor, for the Judge will not hold her guiltless who letteth another disparage her husband.

5. Thou shalt not withhold affection from thy husband for every man loveth to be loved.

6. Forget not the virtue of cleanliness and modest attire.

7. Forgive with grace, for who among us does not need forgiveness?

8. Remember that the frank approval of thy husband is worth more to thee than the admiring glances of a hundred strangers.

9. Keep thy home in good order, for out of it cometh the joys of thy old age.

10. Honor the Lord thy God all the days of thy life, and thy children will rise up and call thee blessed.

Fair Funds Donated To Theatre

A cheque for $300, proceeds from the Spring Fair held at Willows School, was turned over to Bastion Theatre by Actors' Committee president Mrs. A. J. Smitz, at the June meeting.

Committee activities during the past season included opening night coffee parties at McPherson Playhouse, entries in the Victoria Day Parade and the Mad Hatter's contest, a bake sale, and the spring fair.

Mrs. D. Morgan, who is returning to England next week with her family, was presented with a copy of Bastion cookbook, Theatre in the Kitchen.

Two Women Top Mountain

KATMANDU, Nepal (AP) — Two Japanese women have become the first of their sex to climb 24,853-foot Annapurna-3 in the Himalayas, the Nepalese foreign ministry announced today.

The two, Junko Tabei, 31, and Hiroko Hirakawa, 30, both of Tokyo, were part of an all-female Japanese climbing team.

A message from the expedition said Mrs. Tabei and Miss Hirakawa spent a half-hour on the mountain's summit. They were accompanied by two male Sherpa guides, Tenzing Gilerme and Pasang Nima.

CADETS AND GUESTS AT MILITARY COLLEGE TEA

Tea on the lawns and terrace in front of the castle followed Royal Roads graduation ceremonies Friday afternoon. Among out-of-town guests attending were Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Blythe, their daughters Patricia, left, and Debbie, right and son David, pictured with their elder son, Officer Cadet Stan Blythe. Also present at the tea was Mrs. W. B. S. Sutherland, who came from Ottawa to attend the ceremonies. She is pictured, centre, with her son, Officer Cadet Bill Sutherland. In the picture at right, Officer Cadet David Bindernagel of Kitchener, Ontario, admires the watch he won as an award at the ceremonies. He is photographed with two West Vancouver guests, Jill Carmichael and Karen Murray. Following the graduation parade and presentation of awards, guests attended the graduation ball on the quarterdeck of the Grant Block, decorated for the evening as an English baronial hall. Buffet supper was served later in the castle.

Welfare Judge Says Quebec Legislation Has 'Holes'

MONTREAL (CP) — Jeanne Warren, recently appointed judge of Quebec's provincial social welfare court, says rendering a decision on a child is extremely important because it affects not only his life but the lives of everyone surrounding him.

"After all," said the petite blonde of 48, "such a judgment can affect a child's whole life, and a child is never an isolated unit, so his parents and family are affected as well.

"I realize these judgments must consider the points of view of child, parents and society."

Mrs. Warren said she has "great faith" in parents, although "there are no easy answers to problems currently affecting family structures and I am suspicious of those who say they do."

JEANNE WARREN

Her appointment became effective in April—"not an easy time to be appointed to the social welfare court, since all traditions and institutions are being challenged." But she feels "important changes in administraion of justice will develop."

SEES HOLES IN LAW

Her experience as a member of a Quebec commission on health convinced her that "while we are not backward in social welfare, there are holes in our legislation due to the fact that legislation has been voted piece by piece."

Mrs. Warren, a mother of one, has been a force in Quebec social welfare since 1946 when she became the first woman to be admitted to the Quebec bar.

After studying criminology and "a few courses in sociology" at the London School of Economics, she joined the Quebec civil service in 1948 to head a department of Youth Protection Schools.

Her career was interrupted in 1953 when she met and married architect Walter Warren.

"I had to resign my position because I was getting married, and that was 17 years ago. You see how things have changed."

Marriage meant moving to Montreal, but Mrs. Warren says she could have continued her work "if it hadn't been for that ridiculous rule about married women, which has been changed, thank goodness."

She filled in time with volunteer work and lecturing on welfare legislation before entering private practice. It was 1962 when she returned to public life as an election candidate for the Union Nationale. She was defeated.

"My father took me to political meetings and had many lawyers among his friends. I think I came to believe that the law was one entry into public life."

Mrs. Warren does not like being described as a feminist.

"Even in my youth I never would have joined the Women's Liberation Movement. As far as I am concerned, women have their freedom but it is up to them to work hard to take advantage of it.

"I can't see myself marching in the streets. I consider that passe."

Asked if she would prefer to be minister of a government department rather than a judge, she replied:

"It wasn't until last year that I developed enough courage to mention my age. I realized how stupid I was being and that attitude was part of the feminine folklore that I dislike.

"Now that I have told you I am 48, I will explain that I think that 48 is young—relatively, a least—for the bench but is it that young for politics? Political life is so demanding.

"Perhaps if I had been 10 years younger I would have tried politics again as a means of achieving my goals in social welfare. I am not sure. But I do believe there is a great contribution to be made on the bench.

"On the bench, I will come face to face with reality."

Canadian Displays Increase Exports

Canadian government-sponsored display of Canadian women's wear has closed its 1970 stand in New York with officials chalking up another success.

Direct business done by 43 Canadian manufacturers of coats, suits, dresses and sportswear in two showings, in April and the last two weeks, is estimated at $1,000,000.

Most of the manufacturers expect repeat orders.

The department of trade and commerce has been bringing displays of Canadian-made clothing here for American buyer inspection since 1967.

The effort has got to be one of the most successful foreign promotions of Canadian products sponsored by the government. Since 1967 Canadian exports of goods in this line has jumped 80 per cent and trade officials said the New York showings must take some of the credit for this.

Three hundred buyers attended the first showing here in 1967, when it was restricted to rainwear. Some 1,500 buyers attended the April and June showings.

Griffins Celebrate With Anniversary Mass

Mr. and Mrs. Michael Griffin, 1225 Chapman Street, celebrated their 50th wedding anniversary this morning with a special anniversary mass in their home.

Present for the event were their six children and 42 grandchildren. The mass was celebrated by Rev. Maurice Costello.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Griffin were born in Quebec. Mrs. Griffin was born in St. Catherines and her husband in Valcartier.

They were married in June, 1920, at the Church of the Blessed Sacrament, Ottawa, with Rev. Harris officiating.

Following their marriage, the couple moved to Saskatoon, where they lived until 1943 when they came to Victoria. Mr. Griffin established a plumbing and heating firm here in February, 1946, which still operates from its View Street premises.

Four of their sons, Joe F., Michael J., Fred James and Lawrence P., share the family business with their father and Larry Humphries, husband of their sister Dorothy.

The sixth child, Eileen Mary, is Mrs. F. E. Costello.

Victorian Elected

It was announced that Mrs. W. A. Ludlow of Victoria had been elected assistant supervisor of the Pacific Northwest region which takes in Alaska, the Yukon, British Columbia and northwest Washington.

Mrs. J. D. Jameson of Victoria installed the following members elected to Council: Mrs. R. M. Creed, Victoria, chairman; Mrs. R. S. Butt, Victoria, vice-chairman; Mrs. A. R. W. Button, Comox, secretary, and Mrs. A. W. H. Hickman, Victoria, treasurer.

This swimsuit by Oleg Cassini comes with white jersey culottes which instantly turns it into a patio costume. The halter top and wrapped midriff are banded with red and navy, and the shape is soft with no unnatural figure accent. (Fashion League Photo)

Swimsuit Designers Drop Stiff Inner Shells As Soft, No-Bra Silhouette Becomes Popular

The no-bra concept is having a direct effect on swimsuit design this year. Whatever the silhouette or fabric, the swimsuit now must create a soft, natural body effect.

The new naturalness means that whatever is built into the suit as support must not be stiff or shaped so as to increase the size of the bosom. Those who are small may very well prefer suits with no inner shells at all, whereas in past seasons they wore suits with inner construction to enhance the size of the bosom.

Softness is particularly noticeable in all the suits which are now being made from nylon jersey. Many of these used to be draped over inner shells which plainly projected through the soft fabric. Not so with this season's versions. The inner construction, when present, must be itself soft, so that a rounded shape results.

Typical of this new look is one Loeg Cassini suit for Peter Pan. In white, with halter neck and midriff banded with red and navy, it creates shape for the wearer in the subtlest way. The suit looks, in fact, rather like a sun dress in its casual styling, and actually makes a top for a pair of white culottes in the same fabric.

The nylon jersey suit, because it falls softly, in a body skimming effect, is a good choice for those who prefer not to accent their figures.

For the girl with a firm torso, there are the stretch nylons. Even here the effects are soft, following the torso, but not cinching it anywhere. The shape lies smoothly over bosom and midriff, with nothing accented more than anything else. It can be seen in Oleg Cassini's suit with the wide-open tennis neckline, banded in red and navy to a double V point. It forms a sleek top for sashed nautical pants in navy nylon jersey.

When the figure can stand some control, swimwear designers are now providing it in the suit itself rather than in too much inner construction. Firm, elasticized nylon is the material used, often in the maillot, with its built-up shoulders and sleek body silhouette. The bosom is controlled with a natural look, by slashing the neckline deeply, then fastening it just under the bosom. This trick provides shape without stiffness.

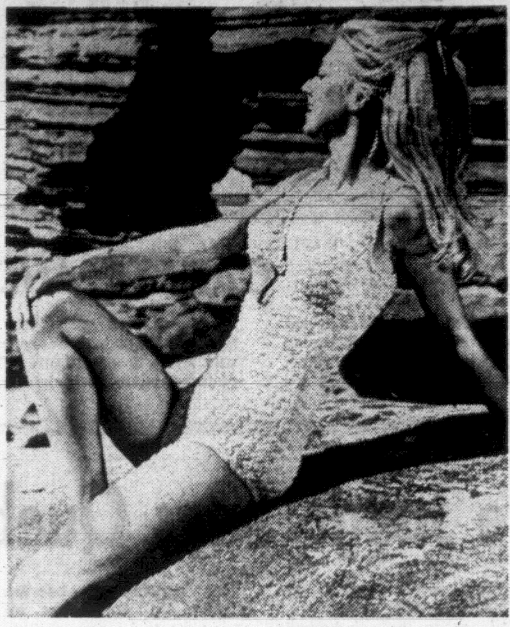
The emphasis on soft, natural shaping is accompanied by a return to more classic fabrics and color treatments. There are many fewer wild prints this year, more solid colors, banded treatments and stripes. Where prints are used, they are softer in colors, more blurry, with some looking like tie-dye prints.

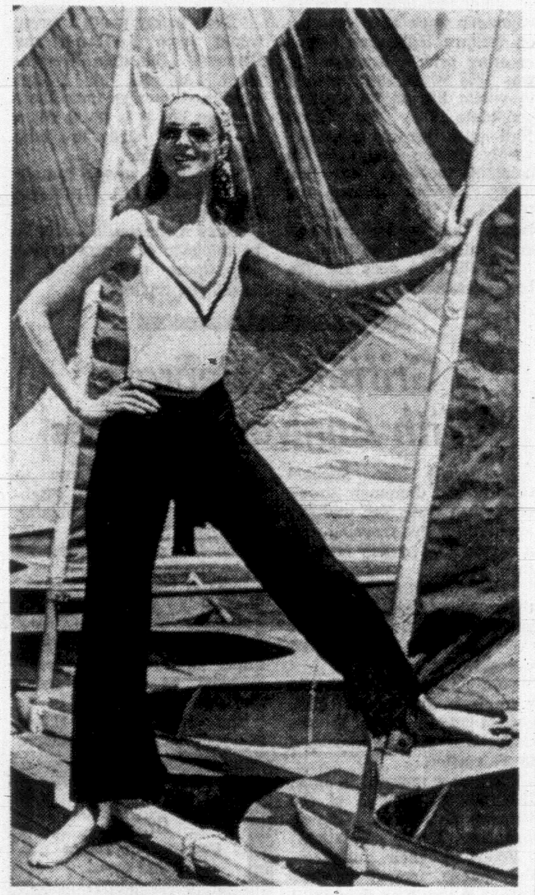
Colors now often run to white, red and navy on soft fabrics, while elasticized or stretch suits appear in black (a great slenderizer) and brightened pastels.

Of course, many suits now come as part of entire beach outfits. Besides pants, there are co-ordinated coats, midi and maxi beach dresses, and new robe ideas, such as Dorcia Wallace's terry cloth ruana with its thickly fringed edges. Many swimwear costumes are now also meant to double as pool-patio outfits.

Is the bikini dead? No, but there is more interest in the one-piece suit because there's more of it to which a designer can give attractive detailing. Where bikinis persist, they always are part of full costumes, with pants, coats or dresses to match.

(A Fashion League Feature.)





The maillot has returned to favor.

Above, it is made in an elasticized nylon that gives body shaping without rigid inner shells. The neckline is wide and caught by a gold colored shell-shaped fastener just below the bosom. The souffle surface of the nylon gives the effect of crochet, now a popular fashion fabric. The color is a bright pastel.

At left is another of the soft, natural nylon suits from Oleg Cassini. The wide-open tennis neckline is banded in red and navy. It comes with sashed navy jersey pants. (Fashion League Photos)

Statistics Study Suggests Advantage to Being Female

By DELOS SMITH

NEW YORK (UPI) — Females not only live longer than males, they are increasingly tougher at birth. In mulling over statistics proving this to be a fact, two scientists speak in awe of "the mysterious advantage of femaleness."

During this century there have been spectacular decreases in infant mortality rates in all medically advanced nations. But the ration of male deaths to female deaths has increased.

Doctors Mark Abramowicz and Henry L. Barnett of the Albert Einstein College of Medicine, New York, frankly do not know what to make of these statistical revelations. However, it is clear to them that "the increase in the male disadvantage in surviving infancy is not a function of time alone."

Some inherent strength in femaleness is involved. Take the once common killer-diseases of infants, for instance. All of them, with the exception of whooping cough, are more likely to kill boys than girls.

"Yet it seems that the elimination of many of these diseases of infancy has unmasked an even greater male disadvantage of survival," they report in a journal of the American Medical Association.

"Infant mortality in modern industrial society is most often associated with low birth weight, but girls are more likely to weigh less than 5 pounds 5 ounces and their average birth rate is lower, so that the disadvantage of lower birth weight does not offset the mysterious advantage of femaleness."

Not only is the human male at a "disadvantage" at birth. So are the males of domestic animals, beatles and flies.

"If genetic maleness is a disadvantage in survival for so many different young animals, it might be expected that the male fetus is also at greater risk and, indeed, human stillbirths are more likely to be male stillbirths," Abramowicz and Barnett said.

This supports a theory that the female advantage is in having two X chromosomes. If genetic defects lethal to the fetus are carried on one X, they could be neutralized by the other X. Males have only one X, which is combined with the Y chromosome of maleness.

But this theory has been weakened by recent autopsy studies of stillbirths, Abramowicz and Barnett said. Where congenital malformation was the primary cause of deaths, the stillbirths were more likely to be female.

Pill Puzzle Compounded By Toronto Study

By KARIN MOSER

MONTREAL (CP) — A physiologist at the University of Toronto Thursday reported finding that oral contraceptives seem to cause fluctuations in the clot-dissolving potential of the blood.

"We took three small groups of women for a three-month study," Anne Hedling said in an interview, "those who had never been on the pill and were just beginning, those who had been taking oral contraceptives for a period of six to 10 months and those who had been on the pill from one to three years."

Working with Dr. F. C. Monkhouse, the researcher found that women who had never taken the pill showed low clot-dissolving potential.

One of the fears expressed in recent medical reports about the pill is that it may, in some cases, cause blood clots.

"Now, note that the women who had never taken the pill had low fibrinolytic-clot-dis-

"Twelve hours after taking their first oral contraceptive, there was a marked increase, not further decrease, in the level of clot-dissolving potential."

But when they took the pill for three weeks and then went "off" it for the final week, there was a decrease in clot-dissolving activity.

REACHES CONCLUSION

Miss Hedlin came to the conclusion that if the use of the pill produced an increase in the level of the activity, then withdrawal could result in a fall in the level of activity.

solving-activity." said Miss Hedlin.

"If, as some workers believe, a balance is normally maintained between the clot-activity in the blood, this fluctuation could result in a disturbance in the balance.

In the group that had been taking the pill from six to 10 months some showed fluctuation in the level of clot-dissolving potential while other didn't.

Those who had been on the pill from one to three years showed no fluctuation, even when the women were off the pill in the final week of the four-week cycle.

The researchers were unable to determine whether in the latter group the blood dissolving potential, while steady, was lower or higher than it had been before any of them took the pill.

In all cases, brands of pills taken varied as did estrogen content of the pill "which ranged from 50 to 100 micrograms."

"So we can't really say that a particular brand or dosage of estrogen had any marked influence on the increase or decrease of blood-clotting potential."

Miss Hedlin is one of 700 researchers presenting papers at the 13th annual meeting of the Canadian Federation of Biological Societies. Some 2,000 delegates from Canada and the U.S. are attending.

Public Impression of Vietnam War Off the Mark

The following report of day-to-day life in South Vietnam was written by J. C. Graham, New Zealand correspondent of The Canadian Press, who recently completed his fifth tour of Vietnam as an accredited war correspondent.

SAIGON (CP) — The war in Vietnam has by now probably received more direct press coverage than any previous war. Yet, the impression the public has gained is in many respects fantastically astray.

The Vietnam conflict is the first really-brought into homes and living rooms around the whole world through television. Vast numbers of people have for the first time become aware of the nature of war.

But ideas of what Vietnam is like today are often wildly wide of the mark.

Comments people make to me in many countries around the world about conditions in Vietnam, and the reality as I see it on the spot on repeated visits, are like two different worlds.

Some of the misunderstanding arises from deliberate falsification by people with ulterior motives. Some may be the result of genuine misinterpretation.

I believe a good deal is caused by the manner in which day-to-day factual reporting by newspapers, news agencies, radio and television unintentionally gives a wrong impression of continuing situations.

ACCOUNTS MISLEADING

Here are a few examples of how misleading ideas can arise:

—A squad of Viet Cong slips into a village at night, shoots an official and wrecks several huts with grenades while fighting its way out.

A news photographer sends a picture to the world of a peasant woman poking through the ruins of her home. He ignores, understandably enough, everyone else in the village going about their daily lives as before. The place has known sudden death throughout history. The world jumps to the conclusion that the town has been destroyed.

—A rocket is smuggled by river to the outskirts of Saigon, hidden under a load of vegetables in a sampan. At night a Viet Cong cadre erects two crossed bamboo poles, props the rocket over them pointing in the general direction of the city, sets it off and rapidly decamps.

Maybe the rocket kills or wounds some people. Maybe it damages a house. Maybe it lands harmlessly in the river. "Saigon Under Rocket Attack," say the headlines.

—A visitor walks through a hospital ward crammed with horrible-looking burn cases. "Napalm," he shudders. Every medical man who has served in Vietnam will testify that the overwhelming majority of burns in hospitals are from explosions of oil stoves using stolen gasoline in error.

The examples could be multiplied indefinitely.

DELTA LEAST PACIFIED

The world tends to think of the Mekong Delta as a once-rich rice bowl now laid waste by war and isolated from the outside in a grim struggle to the death.

Fly over its myriad rice paddies, with the young growth sprouting vividly green as far as the eye can see. Walk through its crowded, busy towns and cities, jam-packed with traffic among the modern buildings. The picture is not the same.

The delta contains some of the least pacified provinces of the country but also some of those where government control is most complete. The province of An Giang, centre of the strongly anti-Communist Hoa Hoa religion, has resisted all efforts at Communist penetration.

I recently was in a village there which has known no war for more than 20 years. A haven of peace, it regularly holds elections, farmers are waxing rich with bumper crops of "miracle rice," the youth is enthusiastically investing in motor-scooters.

No doubt it is better off than most, but it is a far cry from the stereotyped version of life in the delta.

After every trip to Vietnam I am asked if Saigon now is completely crumbled into rubble.

An extensive drive round the city recently revealed only a handful of buildings which even showed signs of damage. One was destroyed in clashes between rival factions of Buddhists, one had not been repaired because of a prolonged dispute over an estate.

Even the areas of shanties levelled during the Tet offensive of 1968 now are mostly rebuilt with substantial four-storey modern apartment blocks.

MANY RIDE SCOOTERS

Saigon, if anything, is slightly cleaner than a couple of years ago, which is certainly not saying much. Then it was impossible to walk on the sidewalks because of the stinking piles of garbage. Now the footpaths are equally impassable because of the thousands of motor-scooters parked on them.

The gasoline smog and traffic jams are worse than ever. The stately avenues of tall trees which once made Saigon such an elegant city are dying because of the foul air.

Residents hack the dead trees to pieces on the spot and use the wood for cooking in the streets.

Local people today call Saigon "Honda City." There are said to be 800,000 motor scooters on the streets, nearly all Japanese.

There may be thousands of people quartered in squalid huts but many have a scooter parked outside. It is common to see families of five on one motor-scooter. Women have taken to using them even more freely than men and weave in and out through the nightmare traffic with the utmost nonchalance. I even saw one suckling a baby as she rode along.

If, as sometimes alleged, only war can afford such luxuries, there must be an awful lot of them in Vietnam. Thousands of students can afford them. You even see hundreds parked outside secondary schools.

There is a widespread impression that the entire countryside of Vietnam has been laid waste, the trees stripped bare by defoliants, the farming areas abandoned.

Flights over a large part of the country show cleared areas around various strongpoints, firebreak bands about strategic mountain hideouts. There may be parts where agriculture is at a standstill, but over substantial areas they are small compared with the great stretches of forest and the endless expanses of productive paddy fields.

The fact is that total agricultural production last year was a record. Rice production has not returned yet to its peak, but if present trends continue, there should be a surplus for export by 1972.

The view from the air shows roads and railways in use where the communications network was paralysed a few years ago. I travelled by road to places previously accessible only by helicopter.

A drive along a stretch of road which I last made four years ago—and had to cover by air in 1968—revealed dramatic changes.

Gleaming new schools and market buildings have appeared. Large numbers of shanties have been replaced by solid new concrete houses. There is 10 times as much civilian traffic on the road.

For a country at war the amount of expression allowed is also rather surprising. Demonstrations of one kind or another—by veterans, students, trade unions, religious groups—can be seen in Saigon nearly every day.

CAPABILITIES REDUCED

There is an elaborate system of pre-reading all 45 daily newspapers published in Saigon, with risk of confiscation if rulings are infringed. Yet the criticisms of the government which are allowed to pass are rather surprising.

None of this is to imply that the losses of life, property and human resources in Vietnam have been anything but grievous. Nor does it amount to a comment on the military situation.

Almost everywhere there is abundant evidence that the Communist infrastructure remains, ready to advance again when given an opportunity. The Viet Cong retains ability to strike nearly anywhere given time to prepare a buildup. But for the moment its power to interfere with daily life is much reduced over much of the country.

Why Punish the Sick?

Frankly, Registered Nurses are worried. You could be next on the sick list. We'd like to promise you Safe Nursing Care but lay-offs at many B.C. hospitals have reduced Qualified Nursing Staff. As a result patient care suffers.

B.C. has less nursing staff per patient than any other province in Canada.

B.C. also has the lowest percentage of government expenditure on hospitals of any province in Canada.

Our Public Health Service has deteriorated. Registered Nurses want the service restored to at least the level it was four years ago. B.C.'s population has grown since then but no additional Public Health Nurses have been permitted by the B.C. government. Community health service suffers from this kind of policy.

What Do You Think?

Are you satisfied with poor quality health care? If someone dear to you were sick, wouldn't you worry?

You can demand an impartial Public Inquiry into the financing of health care in B.C.

Demand answers and action!
Insist on a safe quality of health care!
Economize sensibly — but Don't Punish the Sick!

Issued and paid by the Registered Nurses' Association of B.C.

Soloist was the bride's mother, who sang "At Dawning" accompanied at the organ by Mr. Ian R. Westmacott, ARCT.

The bride, given in marriage by her father, was radiant in a floor-length gown of maltasse featuring lily-point sleeves, jewelled neckline of simulated pearls and silver beads, fitted bodice and waist, and full long train. Expos Complete Plans For Winnipeg Whips

MONTREAL (CP) — Montreal Expos of baseball's National League have completed plans with Winnipeg Enterprises Corp., to place Montreal's class AAA International League farm club in Winnipeg.

The team will be known as Winnipeg Whips, and will be wholly-owned by Montreal.

"We wanted a Canadian farm team," said Danny Menendez, head of minor league operations for the Expos.

"Of course we had explored the possibility of having a team in Winnipeg before. We tried to get into the American Association last fall, but we weren't successful."

Montreal's triple-A affiliate was originally located in Buffalo, N.Y., but the team ran into financial problems. The International League lifted the franchise and gave Montreal 10 days to find a suitable substitute location.

LIKES FIELD

"Winnipeg's ball park seats about 6,000 and the field is really good," said Menendez.

The Expos had also considered three Ontario cities as possible franchise sites—Kitchener, Hamilton and London.

Stew MacPherson, a Winnipeg sportscaster, said the new franchise will give Winnipeg "a chance to get on the map."

Curly Haas, a scout for Cincinnati Reds added:

"It's the best news in Winnipeg in 100 years. The interest of the kids will be lifted 1,000 per cent."

The Whips will play 27 home games at Winnipeg Stadium, with the first one scheduled for June 19 against Syracuse Chiefs.

Eighteen Whips home contests will be played at Montreal's Jarry Park because of previous commitments at Winnipeg Stadium.

McCULLOUGH AT HELM

The Expos announced Terry Hind of Winnipeg will serve as general manager of the club. Clyde McCullough, who managed Buffalo Bisons, will remain at the helm of the new club.

The board of directors and the management of the Expos issued a statement just prior to the Expos-Reds game here.

Menendez said it is likely Winnipeg Goldeyes, members of the class A Northern League, will be moved to Watertown, S.D. He said an announcement will be made in a few days.

The Goldeyes, an Expos farm team, drew an average of 900 to each of its 35 home games last season.

Two matches of the preliminary rounds will be played at Windsor Park with the rest of the competition scheduled for Beacon Hill Park, where Albions have played since 1892.

Eleven teams have been entered by clubs in the Victoria and District Cricket Association.

'Oversight' Frees Russ

OTTAWA (CP) — Russ Jackson, retired star quarterback of Ottawa Rough Riders, is a free agent through a club oversight.

The football club apparently failed to send Jackson a routine form that would make him Ottawa property this year if he came out of retirement. The club unaccountably missed the June 1 deadline.

It means that any Canadian Football League club could sign Jackson for 1970 if he wants to play again, without dealing with Ottawa.

Although Jackson has agreed to play in the CFL all-star game here July 2, he has been otherwise adamant that his retirement is final.

Jackson, vice-principal of Sir John A. Macdonald High School here, has just been promoted to principal of the English section of the English-French Champlain High School, also in the capital.

Taffy Earns Tennis Honor

VANCOUVER (CP) — Tanya (Taffy) Savard, 17, of Vancouver has been selected to compete in the Wimbledon junior tennis championships in England June 29-July 4, the British Columbia Lawn Tennis Associaion has announced.

Miss Savard is the first junior in Western Canada and only the fourth in Canada to be accepted by the Wimbledon selection committee.

Fay Urban of Toronto, Andre Martin of Montreal and Jane O'Hara of Toronto competed in the event in recent years. No Canadian boys have ever won selection.

Television Post

NEW YORK (AP) — Don Meredith, former quarterback for Dallas Cowboys, will become a pro football commentator for the American Broadcasting Company this season on the Monday night National Football League television series.

Swarbrick Dealt To Philadelphia

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Pittsburgh Penguins of the National Hockey League have traded right winger George Swarbrick for defenceman Terry Ball of Philadelphia Flyers.

Ball scored 25 points in 61 games with the Flyers last year. Swarbrick played most of the 1969-70 season with Baltimore Clippers of the American League, but was called up to the Penguins late in the season. He scored 41 points in 56 games with the Clippers.

Three Halfbacks Signed by Lions

VANCOUVER (CP) — British Columbia Lions of the Western Football Conference announced the signing of three non-import halfbacks for the 1970 season.

They are defensive back Gerry Herron from Washington State University and running backs Tony D'Aloisio from Windsor and Don Warrington from Simon Fraser University.

Jackson Signed To TV Contract

MIKE ALWAYS WANTED TO PLAY FOR DODGERS

NEW YORK (AP) —Mike Garrett, at the height of his career as a star running back for Kansas City Chiefs, has formally announced his retirement from pro football to begin playing baseball.

The 26-year-old member of the Super Bowl champion Chiefs confirmed that he would play out the final year of what is reported to be a $450,000 five-year contract with Kansas City next season, and then turn to baseball.

Last week, Los Angeles Dodgers picked him in the free-agent baseball draft.

"I'm not tired of football . . . I love it," Garrett said. "I just always wanted to play for the Dodgers."

Ex-McGill Prof Among Honored

LONDON (CP) — Some of Britain's most famous names in entertainment, a Commonwealth prime minister and a former McGill University professor receive high awards in the Queen's birthday honors list published Friday.

Sir Laurence Olivier, who will play his first musical role next season as Broadway gambler Nathan Detroit in a National Theatre revival of Guys and Dolls, becomes a life baron.

★ ★ ★

Dame Sybil Thorndike, 88-year-old doyenne of British actresses, becomes a Companion of Honor, as does Sir Frederick Ashton, director of the Royal Ballet. An array of box-office names receiving lesser awards includes Richard Burton, TV personality David Frost and a couple of actresses from an export-earning BBC TV serial, The Forsyte Saga, now showing in Canada.

New Zealand Prime Minister Keith Holyoake becomes a knight grand cross of the Order of St. Michael and St. George (GCMG), which entitles him to the prefix "sir."

★ ★ ★

The former Montreal faculty member is Prof. George Catlin, who becomes a Knight Bachelor. Surrey-born Catlin, 73, headed the political science department at McGill from 1954 to 1960 and is the father of Shirley Williams, a junior education minister and intellectual dynamo in the Wilson administration.

Catlin is honored "for services to Anglo-American relations," a subject on which he has lectured and written widely on both sides of the Atlantic.

Also among 31 new knights is Italian-born catering chief Charles Forte, who rose in 20 years from owning a chain of milk-bars to several of the ritziest hotels and restaurants in London and Paris. Others receiving the accolade include Norman Reid, director of London's Tate Gallery, industrialist Arnold Weinstock, managing director of the giant General Electric Co., BOAC Chairman Charles Hardie, and book publisher William Collins.

Sir Ian Bowater, lord mayor of London and a member of the paper-making family with huge interests in Canada, becomes a knight grand cross of the Order of the British Empire (GBE).

★ ★ ★

Richard Burton becomes a commander of the same order (CBE). So do movie director John Schlesinger, who made the award-winning Midnight Cowboy, concert singer Janet Baker, and prewar dance-band leader Henry Hall.

David Frost, currently building a big transatlantic reputation with his own show on U.S. television, is made an officer of the same order (OBE). Also awarded OBEs are actress Judi Dench, veteran song-and-dance star Jessie Matthews, and Nyree Dawn Porter and Margaret Tyzack, who respectively play the roles of Soames Forsyte's wife Irene and Winifred Dartie in the TV version of John Galsworthy's The Forsythe Saga.

Judge Reserves Permit Ruling

A group of members of the Nanaimo branch of the Society for Pollution and Environmental Control will have to await judgment in the court action they brought against the director of the pollution control branch in B.C. Supreme Court Friday.

Mr. Justice Robert A. B. Wootton reserved his judgment to an unstated time after a hearing in his court.

The SPEC members, property-owners and commercial fishermen in the Nanaimo area, were seeking to have W. N. Venables show why there should not be a public hearing on the granting of a permit to Hooker Chemicals to dump effluent into Northumberland Channel.

Nanaimo lawyer, Ralph Hutchinson, represented the members.

Hutchinson argued that Venables, as director, should show cause for refusing a public hearing and granting the permit.

PERMIT GRANTED

Hooker Chemicals, in January, applied for a renewal of a permit to discharge effluent from its chlorine plant in the Northumberland Channel, near Harmac, and the Pollution Control Branch decided not to hold a public hearing and grant the permit.

The SPEC members objected by letter to the director when they heard of Hooker's application in January.

A section of the 1967 provincial Pollution Control Act says that the "director shall decide, in his sole discretion, whether or not the objection will be the subject of a hearing, and shall notify the objector of his decision."

NOT ISSUED

Venables said in court Friday that the decision to grant the permit has been made although it has not been acted upon because of the appeal period stipulated in the provincial act and the legal procedings of the SPEC members.

Gordon R. Munch of the attorney-general's department said Venables, as director, acted within the bounds of the Pollution Control Act.

The director of the pollution control branch has been to court before. The other occasion he was backed by the court in approval of an application by Western Mines to dump tailings into Buttle Lake.

Huge Jet Lands, Crowds Airport

Patricia Bay airport's terminal overflowed Friday afternoon when a huge Boeing 707C stretch-jet unloaded 183 charter flight passengers returning non-stop from London, England.

The passengers were Royal Canadian Legion members and B.C. Government Employees' Credit Union members.

The Wardair plane, one of the largest to land at the airport, touched down into a headwind and needed only about half the length of the 6,000-foot runway.

The big jet can carry more than four times the passengers of the regular Viscounts that travel between Vancouver, Victoria and Seattle.

The parking lot at the airport, customs room and coffee shop proved inadequate for the crowd of relatives and spectators on hand for the arrival.

Between 200 and 300 cars had to park along the road leading to the airport.

Because of the limited space of the customs room, the passengers were divided into groups and left the plane one group at a time.

The London-Victoria flight took nine hours.

Fullback Signed

VANCOUVER (CP) — British Columbia Lions of the Western Football Conference have announced the signing of fullback Herb Covington, 6-0, 210 pounds, who was with Richmond of the Continental League last year.

The 24-year-old Kentucky native was at Memphis State and was cut by New Orleans Saints in 1968.

LONBORG AILING

BOSTON (AP) — Boston Red Sox of the American Baseball League have placed injury-plagued Jim Lonborg on the 21-day disabled list because of recurrent pain in his pitching shoulder.

Thousands Cheer Royal Family

LONDON (AP) — At least 7,000 flag-waving people cheered Queen Elizabeth today as she rode out from Buckingham Palace on a black mare and took the salute at the trooping-the-color ceremony in the official observance of her 44th birthday.

The Queen's actual birthday is April 21, but the ceremony is held over to June when the weather is usually better and is an added attraction to thousands of tourists.

Dressed in a scarlet tunic and a dark-blue riding habit, the Queen rode along the royal mall to Horse Guards Parade where the Scots Guards passed before her to take part in the parade.

With the Queen was the Duke of Edinburgh.

The crowd also cheered the Queen Mother, Princess Anne, Prince Charles and Prince Edward as they passed in a horse-drawn carriage.

Emergency Held

SALISBURY (AP) — Prime Minister Ian Smith's Rhodesian Front government has extended the country's 4½-year-old state of emergency for another 12 months in the first session of the new republican Parliament. All 15 African members of Parliament opposed the motion, which was passed 43 to 15.

Court Sets Indecency Hearing Date

Glen R. Galbraith, 23, and his younger brother Robert J. Galbraith, 19, Friday elected to have their preliminary hearing on a charge of gross indecency heard before a judge without jury in provincial court.

Both were ordered by Judge William Ostler to appear in court June 19 on a statutory remand prior to their hearing June 26.

Robert Galbraith, of 1572 Whiffen Spit, was also remanded to June 16 for plea on a separate charge of possession of a narcotic.

In other provincial court developments Friday:

● Jose Maria Rufino, 23, of 1013 Esquimalt Road, Victoria, was fined $400 for possession of marijuana.

He was arrested May 25 along with Anne Marie Denis at his residence and both pleaded guilty to the charge.

Police found a fifth of an ounce of marijuana and seeds and a hookah pipe with a warm bowl.

Rufino said the seeds were to feed his cage birds.

"It is he that is singing out of tune, not his cage bird," Ostler said in passing sentence.

● Royce Johnson, formerly of 420 Springfield, was ordered by court to keep the peace for six months and released on his own recognizance at $500 bond following a hearing on a charge of threatening.

● Mary Eleanor Lutz, 31, of 2515 Wark, was sentenced to a $350 fine and had her licence suspended when she pleaded guilty to a charge of impaired driving.

● Sarwan Singh Johal, 52, 480 Garbally, was fined $350 and had his licence suspended except for business purposes after pleading guilty to an impaired driving charge.

● Casey Allen Simpson, 18, of CFB Esquimalt, was fined $150 when he pleaded guilty to taking a car without the owner's consent. He had been drinking, he said.

Pilot Safe After Crash Landing

Victoria pilot Charles Estlin escaped injury when an engine failure in his light plane forced him to crash land Friday in the bush near Nanoose Bay, north of Nanaimo.

Estlin, chief enforcement officer of the provincial fish and wildlife branch, was alone in his Piper aircraft.

He was located almost immediately after the crash by search and rescue officials.

The plane was equipped with Sarah, a crash location beacon device which Estlin, an experienced pilot, has been trying to make compulsory on all small planes for years.

The transport department is taking the plane's engine apart to try to find the cause of the failure.

Estlin spent the night with his brother Henry Estlin in Parksville.

300 Cruise Passengers In City

The cruise ship Princess Italia docked easily without tugs at Ogden Point this morning and her 300 passengers will spend the weekend in Victoria.

On hand to greet the $20 million luxury liner were Ald. Clyde Savage, representing Victoria, Gerry Gosley's Smile Show troupe, the girls Thunderbird drum corps and Chamber of Commerce representatives.

The Princess Italia is returning from her first cruise this season to Alaska and departs for Los Angeles Monday afternoon.

Last year she stopped at Prince Rupert on her Alaska cruises but this has been cut from her itinerary and her passengers will spend an extra day in Victoria instead.

The Italia is the first cruise ship to dock at Ogden Point since a strike by the Canadian Merchant Service Guild six weeks ago ended tug assistance for berthing liners.

CAPITAL SCENE

The Kiwanis Club of Victoria will meet Tuesday, at 12:10, at the Empress Hotel Ballroom. David Sinclair will talk on the white paper on taxation. Sinclair is an accountant with a large firm in Vancouver.

Ernest Fisher has been elected president of the Victoria Figure Skating Club.

Others elected: Gisela Sloat, vice president; Charles Thomas, treasurer; and Pat Fraser, secretary.

A sunset ceremony on the lawn of the Legislative Buildings will be performed by Queen's Own Rifles of Canada Tuesday, June 16, at 8:30 p.m. (Esquimalt) Cadet Corps.

Preceeding the ceremony there will be a half hour carillon concert.

FLASHBACK ON CANADA

Port Talbot Hermit Great Settler

By BOB BOWMAN

In some ways John Graves Simcoe, the first lieutenant-governor of Upper Canada, may have been a stuffy imperialist, but he was an amazing man for getting around his rough domain and seeing it for himself. One of his first trips was from Niagara (then the capital) to Detroit in February, 1793, travelling by sleigh and often camping in tents on the snow.

One of his aides on that trip was young Lieutenant Thomas Talbot who was so inspired by the country that he resolved to build a great settlement there some day. He had to return to Britain to fight in a war against France, but he came back to Upper Canada in 1801 and made his dream a reality by getting 5,000 acres of land fronting Lake Erie.

His settlement was one of the most successful ever undertaken. By 1831 he had brought 6,000 new citizens to Canada and established them in 29 townships. A distant relative, Richard Talbot, helped him, and sailed for Canada on June 13, 1818, with a large number of immigrants from Ireland. Later they worked with John Galt, and formed the Canada Company which acquired 1,400,000 acres between present day Toronto and Lake Huron where many towns have been established.

The city of St. Thomas is called after Thomas Talbot, but he was no saint. In fact he was very eccentric and books have been written about his activities. He was very strict with his tenants, for their own good, and did everything he could to see that they became successful. However, he would talk to them only at certain hours, and often they would have to deal with him through a window.

He was known as "the hermit of Port Talbot" when he died in London, Ont., in 1853, on the 60th anniversary of his trip with Lieutenant Governor Simcoe. His body was driven to Port Talbot for burial, unattended except for the driver of the hearse. It was February and the driver stopped at a tavern for some drinks. Then at Fingal the body was left in a barn while the driver spent the night in a hotel. It was a lonely end of the road for one of the greatest colonists in Canadian history.

The Wonderful World of Animals

By DR. FRANK MILLER

DEAR DR. MILLER: Because I'm known as a lover of cats, I get cat problems dumped in my lap by relatives and friends. As a result, all have commented on my ability to train a new kitten faster than anyone else can. My training varies from catboxes for the few who don't automatically use one, to teaching them to use a scratching post. Friends want to know what magic I use to teach kittens so fast. I personally feel it's a matter of gaining the kitten's confidence first and the rest is comparatively easy. Would you agree with my evaluation? P. B.

DEAR P. B.: Absolutely. Regardless of the species, confidence must be a factor if communication is to elicit the most favorable response. Trusting you helps to put the kitten in a receptive mood to learn from you. The female cat can teach her own kittens five times faster than she can teach strange kittens. Her own are obviously confident Mother knows best. And believing it helps.

* * *

DEAR DR. MILLER: For more than a month now, we've been treating our dog for a bladder infection. My husband is beginning to resent spending so much money for antibiotic pills. He says Flora looks and acts as good as she ever did in her life so why go on wasting money on medicine? I must agree she no longer strains at all and acts perfectly well to me too. Would your opinion be a month on medicine might be plenty for a dog who had a bladder infection? G. G.

DEAR G. G.: In my opinion you'd better rely on your own veterinarian's opinion. True, a month might be long enough to feed Flora antibiotics, but from here I can't determine this any better than you can. And you can't. Flora's feeling fine is a hopeful sign but not the final criterion. In treating a bladder infection, the goal is to get rid of the infection completely, permanently, if possible. Unless the appropriate medication is continued of as long as is required to wipe out the infection completely is only a matter of time before it will flare up again, probably with greater severity than before. Periodic checkups are necessary to determine the safe cut-off point for medication. Follow Flora's doctor's advice to the letter. Saving a few dollars on antibiotics now could cost you and Flora much more later.

Poll Shows 70 Per Cent In B.C. Against Tax Paper

TORONTO (CP) — A privately-commissioned public opinion poll released today shows that 57 per cent of Canadians have heard of the federal government's white paper on taxation. About half of those did not like what they had heard.

The poll was commissioned by Colin M. Brown, a London, Ont., insurance agent who has been campaigning against the federal plan for revisions in the tax structure.

The survey by the Canadian Institute of Public Opinion covered 730 Canadians. Of these 413 heard of the white paper. The poll of opinions on the white paper was based on interviews with the 413 who had heard of it.

Forty one per cent of those surveyed in Quebec and the Atlantic provinces had heard of the white paper, 62 per cent in Ontario, and 70 per cent in the Prairie provinces and British Columbia.

Of these, 48 per cent disapproved of the white paper, 30 per cent approved. The others gave qualified answers or were undecided.

The question was: "On the whole would you say you approve or disapprove of his (Finance Minister Edgar Benson's) ideas?"

Regionally, disapproval was highest in the West-51 per cent-and lowest in Quebec and the Atlantic provinces-42 per cent. In Ontario, 49 per cent disapproved.

White to play and mate in two moves. Solution below.

★ ★ ★

Recently, we showed how two of the three Grandmasters participating in the National Open found themselves in trouble in the final round. So did the third, as the game below demonstrates.

WHITE: Walter Browne.
BLACK: Ray Martin.

1. P-K4	P-K4
2. N-KB3	N-QB3
3. B-N5	N-Q5 (a)
4. NxN	PxN
5. O-O	P-QB3

31. QxP	QR-K1
32. B-K4?	R1xB?? (k)
33. Q-B8 mate. (l)

(a) An unusual line.

(b) With this move, the American Open Champion tackles the Australian Grandmaster in Masterly fashion!

(c) This holds back White's Queen side development.

(d) How else is he going to shake loose from Black's strangehold?

(e) If now 13. PxN, then B-N5; 14. Q-N3, Q-B7, etc.

(f) Feels he must hold the Black Queen from getting to KB2.

(g) Getting more involved and getting more open territory for attack.

(h) What else? He must swallow the Knight if he wants to get developed, but now he has to brace himself for the attack that follows, as his Queen-side pieces are not developed. Ray is up to the task!

(i) Prefers to return the piece and get some play.

(j) In fairness to both players, it must be stated here that both were in extreme time pressure, 27 moves in 2 minutes or less!

(k) With 32. . . . R8xB, Black wins, something he really deserved to do.

(l) After the game, Ray was all shaken up. Now that I have seen the game, I can understand why!

Wilson Offers 'Flaming June'

LONDON (CP) — Everything seems to be coming up roses for Prime Minister Wilson in this election campaign—even the weather.

As Britons wake day after day to cloudless blue skies and sunshine in the 80s, voters are beginning to see Wilson as some kind of magician, and the Labor leader, supremely confident of victory June 18, plays along with it.

"When are you going to let us have a drop of rain for our gardens?" a voter asked him on one of his triumphal meet-the-people rambles.

"I shall have a word or two to say on the subject later in the week," replied Wilson with mock solemnity.

ATTENTION WANES

For once, this month is living up to the "flaming June" tradition of bygone British summers, and there's no doubt it is casting a spell over the torpid election campaign.

Voters are intoxicated with unaccustomed heat, and don't feel inclined to give critical attention to party speeches.

Even campaigners find it hard to work up a frenzy while addressing a drowsy crowd in shirtsleeves.

The strange absence of newspapers due to the printers' strike in Fleet Street adds to the dream-like atmosphere. If the hot weather continues, many voters will be tempted to shun the polls for the beaches—indeed, several towns in the industrial north soon will be the scene of a mass exodus since election day falls next Thursday in the middle of Lancashire's traditional "Wakes Week" holiday.

This is when hordes of mill and factory workers head for big, brassy seaside resorts like Blackpool, and party agents in these pro-Labor centres are doubtless groaning at the weather forecasts.

But at the moment, it all seems to help Wilson's seven-per-cent poll lead and hampers Ted Heath's struggling attempts to rouse voters to anger against Labor's record in office.

CADETS AND GUESTS AT MILITARY COLLEGE TEA

Tea on the lawns and terrace in front of the castle followed Royal Roads graduation ceremonies Friday afternoon. Among out-of-town guests attending were Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Blythe, their daughters Patricia, left, and Debbie, right and son David, pictured with their elder son, Officer Cadet Stan Blythe. Also present at the tea was Mrs. W. B. S. Sutherland, who came from Ottawa to attend the ceremonies. She is pictured, centre, with her son, Officer Cadet Bill Sutherland. In the picture at right, Officer Cadet David Bindernagel of Kitchener, Ontario, admires the watch he won as an award at the ceremonies. He is photographed with two West Vancouver guests, Jill Carmichael and Karen Murray. Following the graduation parade and presentation of awards, guests attended the graduation ball on the quarterdeck of the Grant Block, decorated for the evening as an English baronial hall. Buffet supper was served later in the castle.

Welfare Judge Says Quebec Legislation Has 'Holes'

MONTREAL (CP) — Jeanne Warren, recently appointed judge of Quebec's provincial social welfare court, says rendering a decision on a child is extremely important because it affects not only his life but the lives of everyone surrounding him.

"After all;" said the petite blonde of 48, "such a judgment can affect a child's whole life, and a child is never an isolated unit, so his parents and family are affected as well.

"I realize these judgments must consider the points of view of child, parents and society."

Mrs. Warren said she has "great faith" in parents, although "there are no easy answers to problems currently affecting family structures and I am suspicious of those who say they do."

JEANNE WARREN

Her appointment became effective in April—"not an easy time to be appointed to the social welfare court, since all traditions and institutions are being challenged." But she feels "important changes in administraion of justice will develop."

SEES HOLES IN LAW

Her experience as a member of a Quebec commission on health convinced her that "while we are not backward in social welfare, there are holes in our legislation due to the fact that legislation has been voted piece by piece."

Mrs. Warren, a mother of one, has been a force in Quebec social welfare since 1946 when she became the first woman to be admitted to the Quebec bar.

After studying criminology and "a few courses in sociology" at the London School of Economics, she joined the Quebec civil service in 1948 to head a department of Youth Protection Schools.

Her career was interrupted in 1953 when she met and married architect Walter Warren.

"I had to resign my position because I was getting married, and that was 17 years ago. You see how things have changed."

Marriage meant moving to Montreal, but Mrs. Warren says she could have continued her work "if it hadn't been for that ridiculous rule about married women, which has been changed, thank goodness."

She filled in time with volunteer work and lecturing on welfare legislation before entering private practice. It was 1962 when she returned to public life as an election candidate for the Union Nationale. She was defeated.

"My father took me to political meetings and had many lawyers among his friends. I think I came to believe that the law was one entry into public life."

Mrs. Warren does not like being described as a feminist.

"Even in my youth I never would have joined the Women's Liberation Movement. As far as I am concerned, women have their freedom but it is up to them to work hard to take advantage of it.

"I can't see myself marching in the streets. I consider that passe."

Asked if she would prefer to be minister of a government department rather than a judge, she replied:

"It wasn't until last year that I developed enough courage to mention my age. I realized how stupid I was being and that attitude was part of the feminine folklore that I dislike.

"Now that I have told you I am 48, I will explain that I think that 48 is young—relatively, a least—for the bench but is it that young for politics? Political life is so demanding.

"Perhaps if I had been 10 years younger I would have tried politics again as a means of achieving my goals in social welfare. I am not sure. But I do believe there is a great contribution to be made on the bench.

"On the bench, I will come face to face with reality."

Griffins Celebrate With Anniversary Mass

Mr. and Mrs. Michael Griffin, 1225 Chapman Street, celebrated their 50th wedding anniversary this morning with a special anniversary mass in their home.

Present for the event were their six children and 42 grandchildren. The mass was celebrated by Rev. Maurice Costello.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Griffin were born in Quebec. Mrs. Griffin was born in St. Catherines and her husband in Valcartier.

They were married in June, 1920, at the Church of the Blessed Sacrament, Ottawa, with Rev. Harris officiating.

Following their marriage, the couple moved to Saskatoon, where they lived until 1943 when they came to Victoria. Mr. Griffin established a plumbing and heating firm here in February, 1946, which still operates from its View Street premises.

Four of their sons, Joe F., Michael J., Fred James and Lawrence P., share the family business with their father and Larry Humphries, husband of their sister Dorothy.

The sixth child, Eileen Mary, is Mrs. F. E. Costello.

Canadian Displays Increase Exports

NEW YORK (CP) — The Canadian government-sponsored display of Canadian women's wear has closed its 1970 stand in New York with officials chalking up another success.

Direct business done by 43 Canadian manufacturers of coats, suits, dresses and sportswear in two showings, in April and the last two weeks, is estimated at $1,000,000.

Most of the manufacturers expect repeat orders.

The department of trade and commerce has been bringing displays of Canadian-made clothing here for American buyer inspection since 1967.

The effort has got to be one of the most successful foreign promotions of Canadian products sponsored by the government. Since 1967 Canadian exports of goods in this line has jumped 80 per cent and trade officials said the New York showings must take some of the credit for this.

Three hundred buyers attended the first showing here in 1967, when it was restricted to rainwear. Some 1,500 buyers attended the April and June showings.

Around Clock Talks Set

VANCOUVER (CP) —Around-the-clock bargaining for a 10-day period will begin Monday in a bid to find a way out of the deadlock which has stopped virtually all major construction projects in British Columbia.

Twenty-five representatives of building trades unions will sit down at 10 a.m. that day with an equal number of negotiators from the Construction Labor Relations Association.

And, if all goes according to plan, they won't leave the conference until a settlement has been reached in the construction tie-up which began April 14.

The marathon talks were arranged by Labor Minister Les Peterson who met here Friday with leaders of both sides. The unions then rejected his bid for a 60-day truce.

DAILY REPORTS

If a settlement is not reached by Wednesday, Peterson will be sent daily progress reports on the talks. He refused to say what action he would take if a settlement is not reached by June 22.

The non-stop negotiations will be held in five board rooms at the University of B.C. Arrangements are being made to provide all meals as well as sleeping facilities for the 50 negotiators.

Five representatives from each of five unions will meet separately with groups of five CLRA negotiators. The five union teams will be from the plumbers, laborers, carpenters, operating engineers and heat and frost insulators.

A spokesman for the CLRA said:

"We're still holding to our offer of a minimum of seven per cent per year in two-year contracts.

"This offer was made to the unions before the government issued its six per cent guideline and we're not going back on it."

Claim Backlog Probe Ordered

VANCOUVER (CP) — Federal Labor Minister Bryce Mackasey has initiated an investigation into the unemployment insurance claim backlog crisis created by B.C.'s labor disputes.

His action was disclosed in a telegram answering a joint telegram sent to Ottawa Friday by Vancouver mayor Tom Campbell and Rehabilitation Minister Phil Gaglardi.

Gaglardi and Campbell asked Mackasey to help speed up a backlog of about 4,000 unemployment claims filed in Vancouver recently. They offered to help the federal department by supplying extra staff for the local Unemployment Insurance Commission offices.

Answered Mackasey:

"At my request, an immediate investigation has been undertaken by the Unemployment Insurance Commission and as soon as their report is received I will be in touch with you at once."

Mayor Campbell said Mackasey's action will temporarily relieve the crisis siauation in Vancouver.

Mr. Gaglardi and Mr. Campbell met Friday morning to discuss the problem.

"The workers in trouble fall into three categories as far as I can see," said Mayor Campbell.

"First, there are the bulk of them who legally should be receiving unemployment insurance. Then there are the strikers and then those in sympathy with the strikers — like people who won't handle hot goods."

BRAZIL ACCEPTS KIDNAP DEMANDS

RIO DE JANEIRO (AP) — The Brazilian government agreed today to release the 40 political prisoners demanded by terrorists as ransom for the release of a kidnapped West German ambassador.

"In an effort to save the life of West German Ambassador Ehrenfield von Holleben, the government has agreed to release the 40 political prisoners," a note from the government said.

The note broadcast by a radio station here was signed by the ministers of justice and foreign affairs.

Earlier the kidnappers had demanded the release of 28 prisoners and issued a call for guerrilla war.

Presumably the increase to 40 prisoners from 28 to be freed came in a later demand from the kidnappers.

Labor Vote Landslide Predicted in Press Poll

LONDON (Reuters) — The ruling Labor party was buoyed by a public opinion poll today which predicted it would win the British general election Thursday, June 18, by a landslide.

The poll, prepared for a Conservative newspaper silenced by the now-settled national newspaper strike, said Labor would win by 12.4 per cent—enough to give the party a 140-seat majority in the House of Commons. Labor's majority at dissolution was 62.

Standings in the 630-seat House of Commons at dissolution were: Labor 343, Conservative 263, Liberal 13, Republican Labor 1, Welsh Nationalist 1, Scottish Nationilst 1, Independent Unity 1, independents 2, vacant 2, Speaker and two Deputy Speakers 3.

Observers believed that if Labor did win by 140 seats, the victory would mean a change in the leadership of the conservatives.

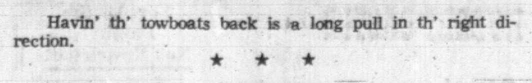
Montreal Posties Back

MONTREAL (CP) — Montreal's postal workers returned to work at 8 a.m. today, ending a work stoppage which began Friday morning to back wage demands and contract negotiations.

About 4,100 men walked out as part of the rotating strikes across the country by the Council of Postal Unions, which represents Canada's 27,000 postal employees.

The council is conducting contract negotiations with the treasury board in Ottawa.



Havin' th' towboats back is a long pull in th' right direction.

20,000 Men Await Word

VANCOUVER (CP)—Striking towboat members of the Canadian Merchant Service Guild today announced acceptance of a settlement proposal, but the guild emphasized that the six-week strike is not over yet.

A guild spokesman said picket lines will be maintained until agreements are signed with each towboat company. The British Columbia Towboat Owners Association, representing the 53 companies, earlier recommended acceptance of the three-year package proposal worked out by federal mediators.

Cecil Rhodes, secretary-treasurer of the western branch of the guild, issued the following statement early today:

"Towboat members of the Merchant Service Guild have by secret ballot ratified the proposed agreement by a vote of 805 in favor and 195 against.

"However, the strike is not over and picket lines will be maintained and honored by all unions until the agreements are signed by the individual companies.

★ ★ ★

"We have also been advised by the B.C. Federation of Labor that affiliated members are not to return to work until they are advised to do so by their respective unions, who will be informed by the federation when the agreements are signed."

The strike began May 3 and hit hard at the B.C. economy, particularly the forest industry. Some 400 tugs, necessary to the forest industry for log and barge towing, have been out of service because of the strike.

Upwards of 20,000 men in logging camps, sawmills and pulp mills have been idled, either because of a log shortage or because workers refused to cross picket lines set up by the striking towboat men. The guild picketed operations that were being supplied by tugs manned by supervisory personnel.

The settlement proposal includes a 28.26 per cent compounded wage increase over three years and extensive improvements in manning and accommodation clauses, together with new Department of Transport regulations regarding safety conditions on the tugs.

The pay increase is 10 per cent each year in the first two years and six per cent in the third. Existing rates for licensed personnel range from $600 to $950 a month.

★ ★ ★

In tabling new DOT safety regulations in the Commons, Transport Minister Don Jamieson said existing vessels will have 4½ years to comply. He said all new regulations will be enforced by DOT inspectors in scheduled and unscheduled checks.

The towboat dispute led to the jailing last week of the guild's chief negotiator, Captain Arnie Davis, for contempt of court. He was released Friday on bail, pending an appeal scheduled to be heard June 22.

He said today towboat men accepted the contract settlement under duress.

Capt. Davis, who at first would not comment on the settlement reached early this morning, later said he had been advised by his lawyer he could make a statement.

He said he is unhappy with the 28.26 per cent compound wage increase in three years and he believes the guild membership was "pressured into accepting the . . . contract because of litigations."

GOOD SAMARITANS GUNNED DOWN

NEW YORK (AP) — A man was killed and five others wounded today when they went to the aid of a woman fighting off a rape attempt by two men, police said. The two attackers drew pistols and fired at the rescuers 12 times.

The 44-year-old woman's screams for help brought the six rescuers to a hallway in a Lower East Side building about 2 a.m.

When police responded, they found "bodies all over the street," a patrolman said.

Mills Ready To Roll

Area forest industry mills shut down by the towboat strike are ready to roll again right away.

We'll be back in operation just as soon as the pickets are gone," Bill Reynolds, manager of B.C. Forest Products' mill at Crofton, said today.

He was commenting on the vote by striking members of the Canadian Merchant Service Guild which favors settlement by a margin of 805 to 195.

PICKET LINES

About 800 men at the Crofton mill have been off work since May 27 when towboat picket lines shut the operation down.

The Guild's pickets and a shortage of logs hauled by towboats have shut down forest industry operations up and down the island, idling about 15,000.

Reynolds said the pickets at Crofton disappeared for a few hours during the night but were back about 6 a.m. today. One of them told him there was an "imaginary" picket line still there during their absence.

In Victoria, W. A. Nelson, manager of the BCFP Point Ellice sawmill division, said the operation will begin again "as soon as we get the word."

It's not likely the operation can get under way before Monday, he added.

Charge Set If Police Find Body

Greater Victoria police hinted Friday the only thing preventing them laying a murder charge in the case of the missing George Finster is the absence of his body.

They called again for help from the public on the case and reaffirmed a $1,000 reward for information leading to the body of the 32-year-old bachelor from Germany they believe was slain in Victoria last Sept. 30.

And they revealed for the first time that human blood and hair had been found in a car seized on the lower mainland and a suspect had been questioned "recently."

★

A police statement said:

"It is the general consensus of the police departments and investigators involved that there may be sufficient evidence to take the Finster case to the courts if his body is located.

"Police have questioned a suspect and seized a car on the lower mainland, in the trunk of which human blood and hair has been found."

"The Greater Victoria police departments confirm that the offer of the $1,000 reward for information leading to the whereabouts of Finister's body is still in effect."

Friday's statement follows one two weeks ago in which RCMP, Victoria and Saanich officers revealed that a joint investigation indicated Juergen Dietrich (George) Finster, whose last address was 1124 McKenzie St., had been murdered early last Sept. 30.

★

Finster was in the Red Lion beer parlor at 3366 Douglas on the evening of Sept. 29, left shortly before midnight and was last seen standing by his car, talking to a man who was driving a late model car.

Finster's car was found abandoned on nearby Ardersier early on the morning of Sept. 30.

Questions from police to public:

Did anyone see Finster, alone or with anyone else, driving or pushing the car from the Red Lion parking lot to Ardersier?

Did anyone see a man standing in front of a car with its hood up on Ardersier, or two men, or hear them talking?

Officers ask that anyone with information contact their local police department.

Price Squeeze Cuts Low-Rent Housing

By PETER McNELLY

Rental accommodation for low-income families in Victoria is becoming scarce as the 20-cent bus ride.

And a price squeeze of rising taxes and living costs is hitting pensioners hard, forcing some to sell their homes.

"You just can't find rentals for families with children," says Victoria Real Estate Board president P. G. Jackson.

A check of rental offerings at the housing registry in Spencerhouse on Cook Street confirms this observation.

Registry worker A. A. Andrews says few of the 100 listings available at any given time at the registry ask $100 or less.

Andrews said it is "almost impossible" to find a two-bedroom house at rents the average family can afford.

●

The Rose-Blanshard urban-renewal project created low-rent accommodaion for 184 families. But this is by no means sufficient to exhaust the demand.

Blanshard Court manager E. S. Roberts of the B.C. Housing Management Commission said he has an "exceptionally large" waiting list for openings at the court, particularly for two-bedroom apartments.

He said most people on the waiting list are families with one to three children.

"Separated wives with children are one of the most difficult problems, and there is almost no provision for widowed senior citizens," Roberts said.

Many families in Victoria are paying 50 per cent of their monthly income for rent. Roberts said this often runs to $200 a month.

Projects like Blanshard Court, he said, can house these people for almost half that amount.

The 1968 annual report of the Economic Council of Canada said a family was living in poverty if 70 per cent of its monthly income went for food and shelter.

●

Generally high apartment rentals and decreasing numbers of inexpensive single-family dwellings will likely force more borderline poor families over the Economic Council's 70 per cent figure.

The problem of low-cost housing also hits hard at pensioners on fixed incomes. These people are immediately affected by any increase in the cost of living.

A small rise in food prices, hydro bills and property taxes can explode a tightly-budgeted pension income. Sometimes the only way to get out of the bind is to sell one's home.

Mrs. Catherine Horne, executive director of the Silver Threads Service, says low-cost apartment housing for pensioners eventually will be available in Victoria.

A 17-storey apartment building is currently under construction at the corner of Quadra and View streets. When finished, it will provide 358 suites at rents between $85 and $90.

Originally scheduled for completion this year, the current construction lockout will delay the project indefinitely, said Mrs. Horne.

Rents will be low because the apartment is being built under the limited-dividend section of the National Housing Act.

Under this section of the act, the builders (West-Park Developments Ltd. in Vancouver and Alberta) have agreed to let Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation fix rents in exchange for financing at favorable terms.

The Capital Regional District Board's 1969 study on retirement estimated 1,200 dwelling units would have to be created in Victoria to relieve the substandard housing problem for the aged.

The study set the figure based on conditions existing in mid-1968, and Mrs. Horne estimates the need has increased since then.

"People will continue to come here to retire and rents continue to increase," she said.

When the View and Quadra high-rise is finished, she said, many pensioners will be able to move into premises vacated by those who move into the high-rise.

But Roberts said single-family rental dwellings are getting older and run-down.

"Victoria is growing old," he said. "Many older homes are being torn down. The situation for senior citizens is heartbreaking."

Hopes for private low-rental housing for families appear dim.

●

"The private market is not providing rental accommodation for the ordinary family," says Jackson.

And he said builders have been slow to construct apartments under the limited-dividend plan because it is not as profitable as ordinary apartment construction.

Government, service club and church-sponsored housing projects have tried to fill this vacuum, he said. But the demand for family housing exceeds the supply.

Jackson said he thinks the limited-dividend plan will catch on eventually.

Meanwhile, the poor and nearly-poor will just have to take what they can get.

Meet Senses Helpless Mood

By HUMPHRY DAVY

It is estimated there are between 5,000 and 7,000 people out of jobs in Victoria and yet only 40 persons turned up at a meeting to discuss a course of action to improve employment and welfare conditions.

This puzzled officials of the Victoria Citizen's Committee of Unemployment, sponsors of the meeting in First United Church Hall.

Chairman Frank Cox put it down to the lack of communication between the committee and jobless, but admitted there might be other reasons, such as apathy or a feeling that little can be done to improve conditions.

But if the attendance was small, there was no lack of interest among members of the audience in discussing ways and means of getting governments to alleviate the plight of the unemployed and the poor.

Alex Bundy of the Vancouver Unemployment Citizens' Welfare Improvement Council, said the jobless and the poor must act if they want social reforms.

"Petitions and briefs are useless," he said. "This talk of war against poverty is just rhetoric."

★ ★ ★

He predicted that before any major reforms are adopted in Canada there would be "blood on the streets."

"I'm not stating anything dramatic," he said. "I'm stating facts."

He said in France only violent riots forced the government to initiate reforms.

"It shouldn't be war on poverty — it should be war on the rich," he said.

Bundy said the Vancouver group planned to seige the office of Health and Welfare Minister Gaglardi to protest his lack of action to improve the lot of the poor.

Gaglardi was accused by Bundy of exploiting the poor and reviving the erroneous belief that the poor are "deadbeats" and "people who think society owes them a living".

★ ★ ★

Labor unions were also criticized by some members of the audience and Victoria Labor Council secretary Larry Ryan who was present, was forced again and again to defend the position of organized labor.

He was asked why the labor movement was not more militant and refrained from calling a general strike.

He replied that a general strike was contrary to the philosophy of collective bargaining — bargaining with employers in good faith.

Unions were also accused of taking little interest in the general problem of unemployment — of being only concerned with unemployment as it affected their locals.

"Canada is the only country in the world where the unions are controlled by another country," said Bundy.

"Unions will also be faced with job busting if they don't take more of an interest in the general problem of unemployment," he added.

Rifle Range Secrecy Denied

Lennard Jones, president of the Sooke Rod and Gun Club, denies there was any "bureaucratic secrecy" involved in the government's leasing 40 acres to the club on Otter Point Road for the creation of a rifle range.

He also asserts in a written statement that the removal of Times' reporter Humphry Davy and others from the site, after neighbors objecting to the range had asked him to be present prior to a sound test, was justified.

"Since the complaint related to the sound of shooting on other properties, rather than on the range itself, these people were naturally asked to leave, as the rough state of the land during construction might have led to injury. This was a normal precaution and had nothing to do with bureaucratic secrecy."

Jones says that after the club had been searching for a suitable site for two years the club applied for a lease in December 1968.

The lease was granted May 16, 1969, and notices put in the newspapers in an effort to increase interest in the group's safety shooting programs.

"Before granting the lease, the lands department inspected the property, and again the close neighbors were informed of our intentions. No objections were made."

Jones says that, to date, the club has not been directly informed of any objections.

"The only communications have been telephone calls to individuals."

He adds that the first official complaint was lodged May 19, 1970, a year after the lease was granted and after the club had completed a $2,500 road building and ground clearing operation.

"Mr. (Tom) Townsend, the nearest resident, informed Mr. (Jubiel) Wickheim that he had complained to the lands department. Mr. Wickheim immediately stopped work on the range and went the same day into Victoria to see Mr. (Frank) Rhodes (lands department official) and suggested that the club make an actual firing test on the property to prove the validity or otherwise of the complaints."

It was the day of the test, May 27, that Davy and others invited by Sooke resident Fred Jackson were asked to leave.

Jones says that nothing will be done until Rhodes' report has been examined by the department and a decision made.

Driver Fined $500

Raymond Youck, HMCS McKenzie, was fined $500 and prohibited from driving anywhere in Canada for three years after pleading guilty in provincial court today to criminal negligence.

Youck was driver of a car which collided with a car driven by John Heffernan, 2399 Dalhousie, on Esquimalt Road just east of Catherine Friday night.

Heffernan, who was trapped in his car and had to be freed by the Victoria fire department, is in St. Joseph's Hospital with a broken leg and other injuries. He is in good condition.

Joseph Volk, 21, of 1029 North Park, a passenger in Youck's car, suffered head injuries, and is also in good condition in Royal Jubilee Hospital.

Youck and Elizabeth Kenney, 3345 Woodworth, 21, suffered minor injuries and were released after treatment.

Police said Youck's car skidded for 275 feet before hitting Heffernan.

The Heffernan car was pushed backward 75 feet.

"I regard this as a gross offence," said Judge J. A. Byers. "The only reason I'c not sending you to jail is because it would ruin your career in the armed forces."

DANGER SIGN AID OFFERED

The Capital Region Safety Council has offered to assist the provincial parks branch and the Greater Victoria Water Board in erecting fences and warning signs in dangerous areas.

The council's offer came after a report that no precautionary measures would be taken in the Niagara area near Goldstream where a man fell 150 feet to his death Sunday.

Provincial parks director Robert Ahrens said he couldn't put up signs and fences because the canyon was Greater Victoria Water district land, not parks land.

Water commissioner Ron Upward said he wouldn't be putting signs in the area either. He said the canyon was divided between the parks and water boards but he didn't know the exact boundary.

Safety council president G. C. Parrot said the impasse between the two boards as to which will erect the fences and signs at Niagara Canyon seems to stem from an unclear boundary rather than any disagreement about the requirement of such measures.

Parrot suggested that the necessary signs and fences be built under the name of the safety council.

He said the problem of who actually builds and pays for them can easily be resolved between the two boards and the council.

Farm Report 'Slanted to East'

A B.C. Federation of Agriculture economist said today a federal task force report on agriculture is slanted in favor of the eastern provinces.

Jack Wessel said the group's findings tended to favor more the Maritime and Quebec provinces and at least two recommendations, if implemented, would jeopardize B.C.'s agricultural industry.

The study dealing with farm economics, use of land, modern technology, tariff policies and many other aspects of agriculture, was released two weeks ago.

It is being studied by Vancouver Island and mainland farm groups.

Some of its recommendations are controversial and these will be thrashed out between federal officials and provincial ministers and their deputies at a meeting in Ottawa at the end of June.

Wessel said the report tended to be one sided as members of the study group were all economists.

"The group should have included a producer and, perhaps, a sociologist," he said. "Agriculture does not only involve dollars and cents, but people as well."

Wessel gave two examples which he said showed the report favors eastern provinces.

FAVORS EAST

It recommended the abolition of freight assistance for the movement of feed to the provinces, he said.

"But for all provinces, except B.C., which receive freight assistance there is equivalent measures to offset the withdrawal of the subsidy," he said.

If freight assistance was abolished and not replaced by equivalent measures, it would mean that cost of feed grains would rise sharply in B.C., he said.

The recommendation urging the end of tariffs on United States potatoes, onions and carrots would only benefit the maritime provinces, he added.

He said the Maritimes produced low-cost potatoes and had a large market for them in Eastern United States.

"It would have the opposite effect on B.C.," he said.

Arthur Mayse . . .

IN SOME OF OUR VANcouver Island provincial parks, you will find vestigal traces of good work done a long time ago. A wishing well . . . a section of mossy rock wall that keeps a sidehill path from crumbling . . . a creek bridge or a lookout point. These are reminders of a desperation program that put young unemployed men to work in the dirty, dirty thirties.

Volunteers were based in camps administered by British Columbia Forest Service, which in those years had parks under its wing.

For their labors, the men earned food, shelter and a few dollars each month. They also got a chance to work, and so escape the soul-rot that saps those condemned to idleness.

I am harking back to those years and those camps because we have come once more to a difficult time. Our provincial government might well give thought to a sensible and hardnosed relief works program for the unemployed young whom private industry cannot at present absorb.

In a province that should be turning more of its park reserve acreage into finished parks, there is no lack of projects that need pushing ahead.

Also, the West Coast Trail waits completion. With federal assistance, young people working under experienced supervision from tent camps along the trail could telescope a job that may otherwise be years in the doing.

The program I suggest is by no means visionary. It worked before when times were tough, and I think it would work now. And it beats welfare — the something-for-nothing that has become a cancer in this province as in all others.

TILLICUM ELEMENTARY held its school sports Friday, and among the fleet-feet who ran in one race was a fairhaired second-grader whose name you may remember.

She's Florenda Joy Dick, but she is not the pale and quiet little girl who went down to Mayo Clinic at Rochester, Minn., for life or death surgery a year ago last March.

At the moment of writing, I don't know how Florenda Joy made out in the school race. But life has taken on glowing new colors for the child whom Victorians by the hundred staked to a future.

Through their contributions, the heart defect that would have doomed her to death in her teens was mended. And the effect has been nothing less than magical.

"She's a real little tiger," said Florenda's father, David Dick of 326 West Obed. "She's growing fast, she has a fine appetite, and it's hard to believe she was once so subdued and quiet."

To make her happier still, Florenda has two dogs now — faithful friend Velvet, and a new puppy. Also, she's looking forward to her eighth birthday, which is coming up on July 10.

And to complete a bright picture, I've just learned that she placed third in a close race.

WORM-TURN, A PLANEtary organization for disenchanted burden bearers, can now claim three members. One is my wife, who is designing an under-the-lapel button on which will be pictured a red, turning worm. The red is for anger. I also belong, and a likely recruit has come forward in the person of a woman who refuses to let her aged mother become a public charge.

But she does feel that the heavy expenses involved in keeping her mother in a rest home should be recognized as a legitimate deduction from income for tax purposes. So do I.

However, Ottawa, which plans to spend $300 million in tax collections on hothouse bilingualism over the next four years, takes a different view.

Worm-Turn assignment:

Ponder that proposed expenditure. Does it impress you as (a) urgently necessary, (b) advisable, or, (c) a colossal waste of revenue better devoted to other purposes?

While you're considering, here's a progress report to a green-thumb lady who kindly sent me some very special cucumber seeds from her supply. Those seeds have sprouted into flourishing little plants from which we expect cukes that long!

Expos Complete Plans For Winnipeg Whips

MONTREAL (CP) — Montreal Expos of baseball's National League have completed plans with Winnipeg Enterprises Corp., to place Montreal's class AAA International League farm club in Winnipeg.

The team will be known as Winnipeg Whips, and will be wholly-owned by Montreal.

"We wanted a Canadian farm team," said Danny Menendez, head of minor league operations for the Expos.

"Of course we had explored the possibility of having a team in Winnipeg before. We tried to get into the American Association last fall, but we weren't successful."

Montreal's triple-A affiliate was originally located in Buffalo, N.Y., but the team ran into financial problems. The International League lifted the franchise and gave Montreal 10 days to find a suitable substitute location.

LIKES FIELD

"Winnipeg's ball park seats about 6,000 and the field is really good," said Menendez.

The Expos had also considered three Ontario cities as possible franchise sites—Kitchener, Hamilton and London.

Stew MacPherson, a Winnipeg sportscaster, said the new franchise will give Winnipeg "a chance to get on the map."

Curly Haas, a scout for Cincinnati Reds added:

"It's the best news in Winnipeg in 100 years. The interest of the kids will be lifted 1,000 per cent."

The Whips will play 27 home games at Winnipeg Stadium, with the first one scheduled for June 19 against Syracuse Chiefs.

Eighteen Whips home contests will be played at Montreal's Jarry Park because of previous commitments at Winnipeg Stadium.

McCULLOUGH AT HELM

The Expos announced Terry Hind of Winnipeg will serve as general manager of the club. Clyde McCullough, who managed Buffalo Bisons, will remain at the helm of the new club.

The board of directors and the management of the Expos issued a statement just prior to the Expos-Reds game here.

Menendez said it is likely Winnipeg Goldeyes, members of the class A Northern League, will be moved to Watertown, S.D. He said an announcement will be made in a few days.

The Goldeyes, an Expos farm team, drew an average of 900 to each of its 35 home games last season.

BAILIFF'S SALE

'Oversight' Frees Russ

OTTAWA (CP) — Russ Jackson, retired star quarterback of Ottawa Rough Riders, is a free agent through a club oversight.

The football club apparently failed to send Jackson a routine form that would make him Ottawa property this year if he came out of retirement. The club unaccountably missed the June 1 deadline.

It means that any Canadian Football League club could sign Jackson for 1970 if he wants to play again, without dealing with Ottawa.

Although Jackson has agreed to play in the CFL all-star game here July 2, he has been otherwise adamant that his retirement is final.

Jackson, vice-principal of Sir John A. Macdonald High School here, has just been promoted to principal of the English section of the English-French Champlain High School, also in the capital.

NEW YORK (AP) —Mike Garrett, at the height of his career as a star running back for Kansas City Chiefs, has formally announced his retirement from pro football to begin playing baseball.

The 26-year-old member of the Super Bowl champion Chiefs confirmed that he would play out the final year of what is reported to be a $450,000 five-year contract with Kansas City next season, and then turn to baseball.

Last week, Los Angeles Dodgers picked him in the free-agent baseball draft.

"I'm not tired of football . . . I love it," Garrett said. "I just always wanted to play for the Dodgers."

Ex-McGill Prof Among Honored

LONDON (CP) — Some of Britain's most famous names in entertainment, a Commonwealth prime minister and a former McGill University professor receive high awards in the Queen's birthday honors list published Friday.

Sir Laurence Olivier, who will play his first musical role next season as Broadway gambler Nathan Detroit in a National Theatre revival of Guys and Dolls, becomes a life baron.

★ ★ ★

Dame Sybil Thorndike, 88-year-old doyenne of British actresses, becomes a Companion of Honor, as does Sir Frederick Ashton, director of the Royal Ballet. An array of box-office names receiving lesser awards includes Richard Burton, TV personality David Frost and a couple of actresses from an export-earning BBC TV serial, The Forsyte Saga, now showing in Canada.

New Zealand Prime Minister Keith Holyoake becomes a knight grand cross of the Order of St. Michael and St. George (GCMG), which entitles him to the prefix "sir."

★ ★ ★

The former Montreal faculty member is Prof. George Catlin, who becomes a Knight Bachelor. Surrey-born Catlin, 73, headed the political science department at McGill from 1954 to 1960 and is the father of Shirley Williams, a junior education minister and intellectual dynamo in the Wilson administration.

Catlin is honored "for services to Anglo-American relations," a subject on which he has lectured and written widely on both sides of the Atlantic.

Also among 31 new knights is Italian-born catering chief Charles Forte, who rose in 20 years from owning a chain of milk-bars to several of the ritziest hotels and restaurants in London and Paris. Others receiving the accolade include Norman Reid, director of London's Tate Gallery, industrialist Arnold Weinstock, managing director of the giant General Electric Co., BOAC Chairman Charles Hardie, and book publisher William Collins.

Sir Ian Bowater, lord mayor of London and a member of the paper-making family with huge interests in Canada, becomes a knight grand cross of the Order of the British Empire (GBE).

★ ★ ★

Richard Burton becomes a commander of the same order (CBE). So do movie director John Schlesinger, who made the award-winning Midnight Cowboy, concert singer Janet Baker, and prewar dance-band leader Henry Hall.

David Frost, currently building a big transatlantic reputation with his own show on U.S. television, is made an officer of the same order (OBE). Also awarded OBEs are actress Judi Dench, veteran song-and-dance star Jessie Matthews, and Nyree Dawn Porter and Margaret Tyzack, who respectively play the roles of Soames Forsyte's wife Irene and Winifred Dartie in the TV version of John Galsworthy's The Forsythe Saga.

Judge Reserves Permit Ruling

A group of members of the Nanaimo branch of the Society for Pollution and Environmental Control will have to await judgment in the court action they brought against the director of the pollution control branch in B.C. Supreme Court Friday.

Mr. Justice Robert A. B. Wootton reserved his judgment to an unstated time after a hearing in his court.

The SPEC members, property-owners and commercial fishermen in the Nanaimo area, were seeking to have W. N. Venables show why there should not be a public hearing on the granting of a permit to Hooker Chemicals to dump effluent into Northumberland Channel.

Nanaimo lawyer, Ralph Hutchinson, represented the members.

Hutchinson argued that Venables, as director, should show cause for refusing a public hearing and granting the permit.

PERMIT GRANTED

Hooker Chemicals, in January, applied for a renewal of a permit to discharge effluent from its chlorine plant in the Northumberland Channel, near Harmac, and the Pollution Control Branch decided not to hold a public hearing and grant the permit.

The SPEC members objected by letter to the director when they heard of Hooker's application in January.

A section of the 1967 provincial Pollution Control Act says that the "director shall decide, in his sole discretion, whether or not the objection will be the subject of a hearing, and shall notify the objector of his decision."

NOT ISSUED

Venables said in court Friday that the decision to grant the permit has been made although it has not been acted upon because of the appeal period stipulated in the provincial act and the legal procedings of the SPEC members.

Gordon R. Munch of the attorney-general's department said Venables, as director, acted within the bounds of the Pollution Control Act.

The director of the pollution control branch has been to court before. The other occasion he was backed by the court in approval of an application by Western Mines to dump tailings into Buttle Lake.

Huge Jet Lands, Crowds Airport

Patricia Bay airport's terminal overflowed Friday afternoon when a huge Boeing 707C stretch-jet unloaded 183 charter flight passengers returning non-stop from London, England.

The passengers were Royal Canadian Legion members and B.C. Government Employees' Credit Union members.

The Wardair plane, one of the largest to land at the airport, touched down into a headwind and needed only about half the length of the 6,000-foot runway.

The big jet can carry more than four times the passengers of the regular Viscounts that travel between Vancouver, Victoria and Seattle.

The parking lot at the airport, customs room and coffee shop proved inadequate for the crowd of relatives and spectators on hand for the arrival.

Between 200 and 300 cars had to park along the road leading to the airport.

Because of the limited space of the customs room, the passengers were divided into groups and left the plane one group at a time.

The London - Victoria flight took nine hours.

Fullback Signed

VANCOUVER (CP) — British Columbia Lions of the Western Football Conference have announced the signing of fullback Herb Covington, 6-0, 210 pounds, who was with Richmond of the Continental League last year.

BOSTON (AP) — Boston Red Sox of the American Baseball League have placed injury-plagued Jim Lonborg on the 21-day disabled list because of recurrent pain in his pitching shoulder.

Thousands Cheer Royal Family

LONDON (AP) — At least 7,000 flag-waving people cheered Queen Elizabeth today as she rode out from Buckingham Palace on a black mare and took the salute at the trooping-the-color ceremony in the official observance of her 44th birthday.

The Queen's actual birthday is April 21, but the ceremony is held over to June when the weather is usually better and is an added attraction to thousands of tourists.

Dressed in a scarlet tunic and a dark-blue riding habit, the Queen rode along the royal mall to Horse Guards Parade where the Scots Guards passed before her to take part in the parade.

With the Queen was the Duke of Edinburgh.

The crowd also cheered the Queen Mother, Princess Anne, Prince Charles and Prince Edward as they passed in a horse-drawn carriage.

SALISBURY (AP) — Prime Minister Ian Smith's Rhodesian Front government has extended the country's 4½-year-old state of emergency for another 12 months in the first session of the new republican Parlaiment. All 15 African members of Parliament opposed the motion, which was passed 43 to 15.

Court Sets Indecency Hearing Date

Glen R. Galbraith, 23, and his younger brother Robert J. Galbraith, 19, Friday elected to have their preliminary hearing on a charge of gross indecency heard before a judge without jury in provincial court.

Both were ordered by Judge William Ostler to appear in court June 19 on a statutory remand prior to their hearing June 26.

Robert Galbraith, of 1572 Whiffen Spit, was also remanded to June 16 for plea on a separate charge of possession of a narcotic.

In other provincial court developments Friday:

● Jose Maria Rufino, 23, of 1013 Esquimalt Road, Victoria, was fined $400 for possession of marijuana.

He was arrested May 25 along with Anne Marie Denis at his residence and both pleaded guilty to the charge.

Police found a fifth of an ounce of marijuana and seeds and a hookah pipe with a warm bowl.

Rufino said the seeds were to feed his cage birds.

"It is he that is singing out of tune, not his cage bird," Ostler said in passing sentence.

● Royce Johnson, formerly of 420 Springfield, was ordered by court to keep the peace for six months and released on his own recognizance at $500 bond following a hearing on a charge of threatening.

● Mary Eleanor Lutz, 31, of 2515 Wark, was sentenced to a $350 fine and had her licence suspended when she pleaded guilty to a charge of impaired driving.

● Sarwan Singh Johal, 52, 480 Garbally, was fined $350 and had his licence suspended except for business purposes after pleading guilty to an impaired driving charge.

● Casey Allen Simpson, 18, of CFB Esquimalt, was fined $150 when he pleaded guilty to taking a car without the owner's consent. He had been drinking, he said.

Pilot Safe After Crash Landing

Victoria pilot Charles Estlin escaped injury when an engine failure in his light plane forced him to crash land Friday in the bush near Nanoose Bay, north of Nanaimo.

Estlin, chief enforcement officer of the provincial fish and wildlife branch, was alone in his Piper aircraft.

He was located almost immediately after the crash by search and rescue officials.

The plane was equipped with Sarah, a crash location beacon device which Estlin, an experienced pilot, has been trying to make compulsory on all small planes for years.

The transport department is taking the plane's engine apart to try to find the cause of the failure.

Estlin spent the night with his brother Henry Estlin in Parksville.

300 Cruise Passengers In City

On hand to greet the $20 million luxury liner were Ald. Clyde Savage, representing Victoria, Gerry Gosley's Smile Show troupe, the girls Thunderbird drum corps and Chamber of Commerce representatives.

The Princess Italia is returning from her first cruise this season to Alaska and departs for Los Angeles Monday afternoon.

Last year she stopped at Prince Rupert on her Alaska cruises but this has been cut from her itinerary and her passengers will spend an extra day in Victoria instead.

The Italia is the first cruise ship to dock at Ogden Point since a strike by the Canadian Merchant Service Guild six weeks ago ended tug assistance for berthing liners.
